'Beware of reaching the dominant in the bass too soon. There are cases, especially when the tonality has been really disturbed by modulation, where a good dose of chords on the dominant is required artistically to redress the balance; but in fairly diatonic cases the cadence can often be shifted "a little to the right" with advantage.' . . . 'If, as often happens, the opening of the melody is repeated in the cadence, make a point of reharmonizing it.' . . . 'On reading a melody the first thing to do is, as we have pointed out, to form an idea of one's beginning and end. The next is to settle in one's mind what the modulations are to be. The commonest mistake is to assume that accidentals in the melody can be trusted to show the way. Not only do they mislead one very frequently in suggesting a modulation where none is required, but also the most necessary modulations frequently occur whilst the melody remains diatonic.' . . . 'Tied notes which fall to the next note are of frequent occurrence. In such cases the last beat of the tied note almost invariably requires to be harmonized by a chord which forces it to fall. The original note is not lengthened merely to give it a longer sound, but because it is the point in the time where the composer feels a discord is an artistic necessity.' . . . 'It is not a bad thing occasionally to let the melody alone for two or three notes; and this is often a happy and musical device after a climax.'

Dr. Buck makes the interesting suggestion that the habit of writing for string or vocal quartet, or some nondescript four-fold formation, should be varied by the treatment of less obvious instruments:

'If the humanity of examiners were only gauged a little more accurately, other instruments would be tried. Even the piano or organ, if a real sense of the technique of the instruments were shown, would be welcome; whereas a candidate who would set a melody for four horns, for two trumpets and three trombones, for oboe, two clarinets, and bassoon (provided only that the melody showed itself suitable to the genius of the combination chosen) would, even if he failed, have given his examiners a notable and pleasurable day.'

The over-confident enthusiasm of youth receives an occasional damper:

'A final warning must be given as to the true meaning of the word modern. There is an unpardonable tendency amongst young students to imagine that they bring music up to date by cramming in all the accidentals possible. It is scarcely untrue to say that the reverse is the case. There is more really "modern" writing in the first eight bars of the voice parts of "Blest pair of Sirens" than in a volume of Spohr's works.'

Professor Buck refers elsewhere, in terms of high admiration, to Sir Hubert Parry's composition, now a choral classic.

In dealing with the higher problems such as adding parts to a given inner part, and constructing variations on a ground bass, precept is somewhat baffled by the variety and complexity of the subject, and becomes of necessity less exhaustive. Every individual case will bring its individual point of difficulty. Professor Buck nevertheless extracts from his experience many hints of general application and extreme usefulness. He is forced, however, into a greater reliance upon their exemplification, and his illustrations, in these later sections, are particularly well-devised and pregnant with instructiveness.

We have said enough to show that Professor Buck's book will be extremely serviceable to the student open to learn.

O that men would praise the Lord. Anthem for harvest or general thanksgiving. Composed by Hugh Blair.

[Novello &amp; Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Blair has succeeded in providing, for choirs of moderate attainments, an anthem combining interest with simplicity of detail and general design. The choral and solo portions are vocal, and the organ part, while demanding some skill, cannot be called difficult. The music is well written, with just sufficient ornament, and we have no doubt it will be widely used.

Six vocal duets. For medium voices, with pianoforte accompaniment. By Joseph L. Roedel.

[The Vincent Music Co.]

The voice of modern criticism may say of these duets that they are based upon the conventionalities of a generation ago. The accusation is true, but its weight depends upon the manner of using the conventionalities, which in the present instance is beyond all question artistically excellent. Mr. Roedel has no mean gift of melody, and his accompaniments, although tending towards formula, are designed with care and well-rounded off. Neither the words (by Florence Hoare, J. Yeld, James Strang, and Hugh Conway) nor the music make any considerable demands upon one's intellectual insight, and in many ways the duets are ideal for home consumption. Their names are 'June-tide,' 'Merry daffodils,' 'After a storm,' 'Blue Iris,' 'On a moonlit lake,' and 'A little comedy.'

Come out across the heather. Beside the river. When the tendrils deck the vine. My love and I. When lilies are blowing. English words by W. G. Rothery. Composed by Adolf Jensen. Op. 28. Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7.

[Novello &amp; Co., Ltd.]

The problem of writing simply and naturally without commonplace presented no difficulty to Adolf Jensen in the composition of his part-songs. Many of the musical ideas expressed in this group of pieces are essentially original, although they required no bizarre methods of expression. Choral societies in search of music that shall be intelligible to the most elementary judgment and attractive to the most critical could not do better than turn their attention to such examples as 'Come out across the heather' and 'When the tendrils deck the vine.' These two stand but slightly higher than their fellows in the merit and variety of their rhythms and vocal writing. In no case is there any serious difficulty in execution, or on the other hand any monotony arising from simplicity.

Elegy and Tempo di Minuetto (Nos. 417 and 418, Novello's Original Compositions for the Organ). By C. H. Lloyd.

Theme with Variations and Fugue (No. 419). By Alfred Hollins.

Variations on a Theme by Beethoven. By Gustav Merkel (Op. 45).

[Novello &amp; Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Lloyd's two pieces display those characteristics which we always associate with his work, and the charm of material and absolute finish of his workmanship are here greatly in evidence. While the Elegy offers little real difficulty, great neatness will be found necessary. Particularly is this so in the Minuetto, which would form an excellent study in smooth thirds and sixths. Both pieces should be found in the repertoire of every organist to whom refinement appeals.

Mr. Hollins contributes, in his Theme and Variations, an important number to modern organ music, and we think he has been even more than usually successful. The Theme itself is charming, and the Variations generally well contrasted, and (a point we insist on as important) of sufficient diversity of texture to prevent the theme from standing out each time in a bald and monotonous manner. The first and third Variations are admirable examples of what this form of composition should be. The Fugue is bright and effective, and includes an excellent pedal-point and a brilliant peroration. The piece is assured of a wide acceptance.

Merkel's Variations (edited by John E. West) contain many points of interest, while they present some difficulty. This latter should not, however, debar the earnest student from becoming intimate with the excellent material of which the work is full. The variation form has prevented Merkel from employing the dreary sequences for which we think he so often showed an especial weakness. It should be added that the Variations are preceded by an introduction.

The slow movement from Sir Edward Elgar's Violin concerto has received reverent and very skilful treatment at the hands of Mr. Charles Macpherson, to whom the thanks of organists are due for placing within easy reach this lovely movement. A refined organ and an artistic organist are the remaining requirements, but fortunately both are becoming less rare, so that the music before us may become at least as widely known by its transcription for the organ as by the instruments for which it was composed.

Fourth Trio, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello. Composed by Ernest Austin. Op. 26.
[Stainer & Bell.]

This is the Trio which, as briefly recorded in our columns, received its first performance at the hands of Madame Lily Henkel, Madame Beatrice Langley and Miss May Mukle at Steinway Hall, on November 13, 1909. It is one of Mr. Austin's most serious contributions to musical literature, and it says much for his power of concentration and sustained thought that his high purpose is carried out without any falling off of musical interest from beginning to end. The Trio is in one movement, free but well-balanced in form. Its subject-matter forms the material of three sharply divided and contrasted sections, one broad, another—more prominent and characteristic—impassioned, and a third akin to a Scherzo. The themes, except such as belong to this lighter and more rhythmic group, are arresting rather than engaging, but their conception and handling are no mere empty striving for originality. The work is written throughout with a hand sure of its task and guided by a brain that has something real to express. Even where the music appears to assume an uncouth shape, one is always fully conscious of this sincerity of purpose and truthfulness.

'COME, LIVE WITH ME.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—The song, 'Come, live with me and be my love,' as desired by Mrs. Godfrey Pearce in your May issue (p. 314), was composed by the late John Liptrot Hatton about the year 1850. The lithographed portrait on the outside of the song—representing Mario playing on the harp-lute (not a mandoline, as is generally supposed), while Grisi is represented coming down the steps of a terrace to listen—is merely a copy of a photograph which was taken in 1857. This photograph shows Mario singing in 'Trovatore,' accompanying himself on the harp-lute, and represents a scene in the first act of the opera, first given at Covent Garden, with Mario and Grisi, on May 17, 1855.

Mr. Robert Bruce Armstrong, in his beautiful folio volume, 'English and Irish Instruments,' issued in 1908, gives a reproduction of this interesting photograph, and he adds: 'The prettily-conceived picture was lithographed for the title-page of J. L. Hatton's well-known song, "Come, live with me and be my love," one of the few English songs occasionally sung by Mario.'

Yours faithfully,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

Ennisorthy.

P.S.—I may add that an arrangement of Hatton's song can be had in Novello's Part-song Book, vol. xii., No. 360. Price 3d.

Dr. Flood also writes to us as follows on

'THE WHITEHALL ORGANS.'

There are just one or two points in Mr. Andrew Freeman's interesting article (in your August number) on the above subject that need explanation.

Edward Norgate is said to have held 'from 1611 onwards' the grant of Tuner, &c., of His Majesty's organs. Now, according to the Declared Accounts in the Audit Office (as printed in the Musical Antiquary for July, 1911), Andrea Bassano was Maker, Tuner, and Repairer from 1610 to 1614. Probably 1611 may be a typographical error for 1614 or 1621.

Again, Mr. Freeman asks 'Who built the organ of 1662?' I think it not unlikely that the builder was James Farr. Of course John Hingston was the official keeper and repairer of the organs at the Restoration, but James Farr was 'Organ Maker' in the Lord Chamberlain's accounts for 1660. On April 1, 1663, Hingston got a warrant for the payment of £67 11s., which included an item 'for removing the organ from Whitehall to St. James's for the French music.'

On June 24, 1665, a warrant for payment of money due as 'Organ Maker' was issued to James Farr, including his New Year's gifts for the years 1660, 1661, 1662, 1663, and 1664. He appears as 'Organ Maker' in the accounts for 1668, and again in 1669, with a yearly fee of £10. Evidently he was superseded in 1671 by Bernard Smith, and on June 20, 1672, John Dallam was appointed one of His Majesty's organ tuners.

PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—It has occurred to me that in the multitude of methods for the rapid development of the fingers, for pianoforte players, sufficient attention is not given to the extensor muscles of the hand, and I am convinced that a great deal of the difficulty in the development of evenness in scale-passages is caused by this lack of attention. It is obvious, that to play rapidly one must get the fingers out of the way as quickly as they are to be put down, and that therefore the command of these muscles must be as perfect as in the case of the flexors, and I think, considering the difference there is in the possibility of development, the extensors should really have the greater attention for a long time.

A little experiment will show any player where the root of his uneven playing lies, and the use of the following experiment as an exercise will eventually eradicate it, and in a much shorter time than the actual playing of scales could do, and much more perfectly.

Lay the hand and arm upon a table, palm downwards, at about the same level as the keyboard, with the elbow advanced the usual distance, and for the experiment use the left-hand (unless the student happens to be left-handed). Then raise the hand from the wrist, and hold it as far back as possible and keep it there; then close the fist lightly, and suddenly stretch out the fingers with great energy, pulling the back of the hand and fingers as far back over the arm as possible, keeping the fingers and thumb together, not spread out, and repeat the closing and opening about twelve times or until fatigue is felt in the forearm, behind the wrist and at the elbow, when the exercise should cease, and the operation be carried out with the other hand, and repeated alternately with either hand, about three times at one sitting, about four times a day.

But for the experiment, repeat the movements four or five times after fatigue is felt (according to the strength and development of the arm of the experimenter, the object being to temporarily exhaust the muscles). Then drop the hand upon the table and perform a moderately rapid shake very lightly with every two fingers, and notice how the naturally uneven places are accentuated, and how obvious to the mind is the cause.

To get the full benefit of both the exercise and the experiment, the least possible force must be used in closing the hand and the greatest in extending it.

I am, Yours faithfully,

T. J. LINEKAR,

Organist of St. John's, Colwyn Bay.

STUDENT COMPOSITIONS AT MANCHESTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In the article headed 'Manchester and District,' which appears in the August number of the Musical Times, there are some statements made regarding the programmes of the Royal Manchester College of Music which are not correct. Your correspondent remarks that 'as last year Miss Alice Dill alone appears in the programmes as a composer.' If the programmes for last year's public examination concerts were consulted, it would be found that besides three part-songs by Miss Alice Dill, there was performed a Trio for piano-forte, violin, and violoncello, by a student from Dr. Walter Carroll's composition class. It would also be seen that at the first public examination concert of the session 1910-11, held in the Whitworth Hall, Victoria University, an Octet for strings by the same student was given with much success. Regarding the statement of your correspondent as to the amount of progress made in composition at the College, perhaps the fact is not known to him that in the last year there have been more original pieces by students performed than there were in the first ten years of the existence of the College.

Yours faithfully,

A.R.M.C.M.

Obituary.

The death is announced on August 14, at his residence in Forest Hill, of Mr. George J. Webb, aged seventy-four years. Mr. Webb was for forty-four years a member of Sir August Manns's Crystal Palace Orchestra. He was present at the opening ceremony of the Palace by the late Queen and Prince Consort, and remained until the orchestra was disbanded, at which time he was the only surviving member of the original organization. He also played the clarinet for several years at the Philharmonic and principal London and provincial concerts. He founded and conducted both the London Septette Union (a professional organization that did good classical work in London and the provinces) and the St. Peter's Amateur Orchestral Society, Brockley, which he carried on for twenty-five years until his health began to fail, six years ago. Mr. Webb came from a very musical family, and his musical gifts have descended upon his children. His two brothers and his daughters are all in the profession.

We learn with regret of the premature death of the young violinist, Hilary Gauntlett, who was drowned whilst bathing at Dieppe on August 9. Mr. Gauntlett, a grandson of the late Dr. Henry J. Gauntlett, was a violinist of great promise, having studied for many years with the late August Wilhelmj, by whom he was much esteemed, and later with Henri Berthelmer, in Paris, and Ottokar Sevcik in Prague. He had been for the past three years a member of the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, and was possessed of a remarkably extensive solo repertory. Mr. Gauntlett, though only twenty-four years of age, was already well-known and warmly esteemed for his great talent by many London musicians. The funeral took place at Kensal Green Cemetery on Tuesday, August 15.

We regret also to have to record the following deaths:

The Very Rev. ROBERT GREGORY, D.D., in London, on August 2. Although the late Dean had many important interests to serve besides that of music, the influence he was able to exert in the application of the art to the services at the Cathedral calls for an expression of gratitude and deep respect on behalf of all concerned with ecclesiastical music. He was appointed Canon of St. Paul's in 1863, and it was in happy co-operation with the late Sir John (then Dr.) Stainer, who became organist to the Cathedral in 1872, that those great reforms in the musical arrangements were accomplished that gave the Cathedral services the world-wide reputation they have maintained to this day. Dr. Gregory became Dean of the Cathedral in 1891. He was born at Nottingham, on February 9, 1819, and was therefore over ninety-two years of age at the time of his death.

Prof. ALBERT HEINTZ, at Berlin, in the ninetieth year of his age. He was one of the earliest admirers of Wagner, and is mainly known through his pianoforte arrangements from the 'Ring' and 'Parsifal.' He supervised the first edition of Wagner's correspondence with Herr Otto Wesendonck.

Prof. ROBERT RADECKE, at Wernigerode (Harz), on June 21. He was born on October 31, 1830, in Dittmannsdorf, in Silesia. He became conductor at the Berlin Court Opera in 1863, and retained the post for twenty-four years. On the death of Herr Julius Stern he became principal of the well-known Stern Conservatoire, and in 1892 he was nominated principal of the Royal Prussian Institute of Church Music, a position he occupied until 1907.

Herr RUDOLF KRZYZANOWSKI, at Graz, at the age of forty-nine. The deceased was chief conductor of the Weimar Court Opera. He retired for a period owing to differences with another conductor, and fought a successful action (lasting three years) against the authorities of the theatre. He had been reinstated, when he had to submit to an operation which proved fatal.

Prof. JOSEPH GÄNSBACHER, at Vienna, in the eighty-third year of his age. He was an intimate friend of Brahms. For many years he held a prominent position at the Vienna Conservatoire.

Mr. BRUNO OSCAR KLEIN, former organist of the St. Francis Xavier Cathedral at New York, and a talented composer, who recently passed away at New York at the age of fifty-six.

Prof. SAMUEL DE LANGE, at Stuttgart, on July 7, aged seventy-one. He was a distinguished organist and composer, and had been principal of the Royal Conservatoire since 1893.

Mr. MAENGWYN DAVIES, musical director of the London Wesleyan Mission, at Matlock, aged forty-three.

Mr. FREDERICK TIVENDELL, at Cassel, aged eighty-six years. He was born an Englishman, but as early as 1843 he settled at Cassel, where he earned a considerable reputation as a pianist and composer. He frequently played in public with Spohr and, later, with Dr. Joachim.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC CLUB.

The Club was founded in 1885, and ever since that time it has been a fruitful means of keeping old students in touch with one another and with the Academy. In order to mark the departure of the Academy to its new abode, the annual dinner, which was held at the Criterion Restaurant on July 22, was specially patronised by members and Academy officials. During the proceedings a donation of £250 was made on behalf of the Club towards the building fund of the Academy. Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Principal of the Academy, presided, Mr. Stewart Macpherson (President of the Club) being vice-chairman. Amongst the guests were Lady and Miss Mackenzie, Mrs. Stewart Macpherson, Mr. and Mrs. Randegger, Mr. Louis N. Parker, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Myles B. Foster, Dr. Dundas Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Tobias Matthay, Mr. F. Corder, Mr. Fred Walker, Dr. McNaught, Dr. H. W. Richards, Mr. F. A. W. Docker, Mr. Arthur O'Leary, Mr. F. W. Renault, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Percy Baker. An excellent musical programme was sustained by Mr. Marcus Thomson, Mr. Rowsby Woof, Miss Carmen Hill, and Mr. Arthur Alexander, with recitations by Mrs. Tobias Matthay.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in proposing the toast of the Royal Academy of Music, said that on that occasion he felt a natural elation at the accomplishment of a long-cherished scheme, but also there was the sober thought—which would arise—at the final cutting of long-established links and ties. Somehow, as the moment for departure approached, some of them become uncommonly silent. Their little jokes were more feeble than usual. But it would be a poor certificate to the very essence and power of their Art if musicians were incapable of sentiment and emotion, and, if they felt it, were afraid to show it. He reminded his audience of the legend of the Academy ghost, which was reputed to be the shade of a former student who lost his way in the mazy passages of the old building and had never again appeared in the flesh. This ghost paid him (Sir Alexander) a visit a day or two ago, and after some general and not pleasant remarks inquired what was to become of him now that the Academy was moving? Sir Alexander replied that he hoped he would come with them, but the ghost rejoined that for some time back he had not liked the music they taught and played, and if it was going to be like that in Marylebone Road he preferred to remain at Tenterden Street amidst the noise of the motor cars. Sir Alexander said he could make no promise, and as to the noise of the music he would have to consult the Curator (Mr. Corder), because he thought he knew more about it. The ghost stated that he did recently approach Mr. Corder on the point, but he found the Curator busy in the library tearing up books on Harmony and Counterpoint on the ground that they would not be wanted any more. After some reference to the sacrifices and work that had made the new building possible, the ghost went on to say: 'Now, you have always listened to me and generally taken my advice; that is why I have put up with you so long. You will all have to work much harder in the new place or things won't go as you expect. Take the accumulated history and memories of eighty-nine years along with you, and take me with you to keep you all straight. One thing more. I see you've a lot of young professors about—at least I suppose they are professors, wearing queer hats and things—not a bit like my time. Tell them that the future of the Royal Academy of Music will presently rest very much with them—you seniors can't go on for ever (Sir Alexander said he winced at this). If these young professors don't all realise this, and pull together for the school's interest and reputation, I'll come one night and frighten them all out of their wits.' Sir Alexander promised that he would convey the message, and thereupon the ghost disappeared with a most melodious twang. He went on to say that he regarded the Academy Club as the best working factor for maintaining the interest of old students in the welfare of the Academy. They all wanted the new home to feel like the old one, and this would be best done by their being surrounded by familiar faces, and they would help immensely if they taught the new-comers how to continue the story of the institution in the right united and affectionate spirit. He asked them to stand and drink the toast, 'The Royal Academy of Music—may its luck be a Moto perpetuo, and may it flourish root and branch.'

Mr. Macpherson proposed the 'R.A.M. Club.' This year, he said, they had enrolled forty-three new members and twenty-two associates. He concluded by handing to the chairman a cheque for £250, as a donation from the Club, towards the building fund for the new home of the Academy.

Mr. Louis N. Parker proposed 'The Ladies' in an amusing speech, and Mr. Myles B. Foster was equally amusing in replying on their behalf.

The Chairman, responding to a toast in his honour, said that next year he would have completed half-a-century of his connection with the Academy.

'The Vice-Chairman and President of the R.A.M. Club' was proposed by Mr. Tobias Matthay, and replied to by Mr. Stewart Macpherson. Dr. Richards proposed 'The Artists and Visitors,' and Mr. Corder responded.

THE SHEFFIELD WORLD-TOUR CHOIR.

The Brisbane newspapers give long accounts of the doings of this choir under Dr. Coward on June 10. A feature of Dr. Harris's scheme in arranging the great tour has all through been the securing of the co-operation of local choirs. At Brisbane, the well-known Ipswich Cambrian Choir, under Mr. Leonard Francis, sang in turn with Dr. Coward's choir at one of the important functions. This was a bold venture, but it was justified by its results. We read that the Ipswich chorists made a great sensation by their deeply expressive singing of Mackenzie's fine part-song, 'The Singers,' which is one of the favourite pieces in the extensive repertoire of this choir. They also sang Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' which Mr. Francis informed us recently, when he was in this country, is another of their favourites.

Dr. Coward's choir, of course, was able to afford the audience a great experience, and the appreciative native choralists many lessons. His programme included the great motet for double chorus, 'Sing ye to the Lord' (Bach), Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,'—both very severe tests of technical and interpretative capacity, which were surmounted with ease,—Mackenzie's 'A Franklyn's Dogge,' Thompson's 'Night hymn at sea,' and many other part-songs.

The Brisbane Musical Union, under Mr. George Sampson, contributed Leslie's 'Lullaby of Life' to the programme. The whole gathering seems to have been a pleasant and memorable one for all concerned.

Brisbane was the first town of importance visited in Australia. The following is a brief itinerary of the remainder of the tour:—June 13-20, Sydney; June 21-July 10, tour in New Zealand; July 11-13, Tasmania; July 15-21, Melbourne; July 26-28, Adelaide; August 3, Perth, sail for South Africa; August 21-23, Durban; August 24, Pietermaritzburg; August 25, Pretoria; August 26-31, Johannesburg; September 4-5, Kimberley; September 7-9, Cape Town; September 10, sail for England; September 30, arrive in London.

SCHOOL SINGING DEMONSTRATION.

A remarkable demonstration of the musical training of young people was given at the Royal Academy of Music (the Tenterden Street premises) on July 24. It was generously organized by Mr. James Bates, the principal of the London College for Chorists, in order to exhibit to Canadian school teachers what is being accomplished in schools and junior music classes in this country. The event attracted a large expert audience from all parts of the Kingdom.

The boys from Mr. Bates's College formed one choir of sixty voices (strengthened in some pieces by girls from the Francis Holland School, Graham Street, S.W.), and a choir of girls, conducted by Miss Margaret Nicholls, came from the Farmer Road, Leyton, Elementary School. The singing by both choirs was superb. It was easy to account for the excellence of the College boys, because they are practically professionally trained and are nearly all solo choristers, but one could only listen in amazement to the charming singing of the Farmer Road girls, and wonder how such results could be secured in an ordinary elementary school. It was this girls' choir that carried off the chief junior trophy at the far-distant Blackpool Festival last October, and it has been equally successful nearer home. Miss Nicholls unquestionably has special gifts in training children not merely to produce beautiful tones and to sing with accurate intonation, but also to enunciate clearly, and, we would say, above all, to sing expressively. Among the pieces sung by the boys we may specially mention Mendelssohn's motet, 'O praise the Lord,' and Elgar's 'Praise to the Holiest' ('Dream of Gerontius'); and, notably, 'Let the bright Seraphim' (Handel), to the trumpet obbligato of Mr. Solomon. The Farmer Road children sang 'Weep no more' (Mr. Richardson), 'The spinning chorus' (Wagner), 'Sunbeams' (Ronald), and other pieces. The combined choirs, under Dr. McNaught (who took the chair), sang Elgar's 'Snow,' 'Fly, singing bird,' and 'In Hammersbach,' and Brahms's 'Wiegenlied' (trio arrangement).

An extremely interesting interlude was provided by Miss Kathleen O'Dowd (assisted by Miss Muirhead), who gave an exhibition of the Jaques-Dalcroze Rhythmic Gymnastics. This highly educational system, now that it is beginning to be understood in its musical aspect, promises to have some vogue in this country. It is fully described in the August and September numbers of the School Music Review. The Canadian visitors and the school music experts present were eloquent in the expression of their admiration of the excellence of the performances. Much credit is due to Mr. Bates.

THE CORONATION CHOIR.

Mr. Harry Thomas, the tenor and choirmaster at Brick Presbyterian Church, Rochester, New York, in thanking us for a notice given recently, says: 'On pp. 434 and 436 of your July issue, I find the names of some friends of mine who played and sang at the Coronation Service, sixteen in all. The "Form and Order" just received is very interesting, and we hope to sing Sir Hubert Parry's "Te Deum," if it is published separately.'

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The annual summer and autumn season of Promenade Concerts given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood's direction again illustrates the contrariness—or perhaps the business instinct—of the British musical public. After a season of concert-giving that is generally acknowledged to have been a pecuniary failure, audiences have been thronging the floor and balconies of the Queen's Hall in the middle of the holiday season and a heat wave, in order to hear in discomfort what they might have heard in comfort before. The programmes are a little—very little—more 'popular' than those of symphony concerts; but the real reason of course lies in the price of admission. Business instinct argues that if a commodity is offered dear in one market and cheap in another, it is better to avoid the dear market altogether and plump for the cheap one, even though it opens several months later. As a result, we behold the phenomenon that August, September, and early October, a period once considered a blank in musical life, are gradually attracting to themselves the balance of successful concert-giving during the year. Perhaps the change of habit will extend. We may see the time when recital-givers and their 'adherents' (we thank thee, D— T—, for that word), will be invading Bechstein, Æolian, and Steinway Halls, while their more fortunate non-musical friends are opening their campaign upon the grouse. We hope not. An active musical season is an excellent thing for those who are forced to remain in London for the holiday season; but those whom it summons from pleasure to professional duties feel that their grievance is sufficiently heavy already. Any augmentation might be resisted—Heaven forbid!—by a strike of musical critics. The group of these gentlemen who attended dutifully on August 12 looked prepared to express their thoughts with even more than their usual terseness. (They were not all there. One well-known writer, of bucolic tastes, was busily initiating, through the columns of his own journal, an elaborate campaign against wasps.)

Of course there was an enormous audience, whatever the programme. The game of 'spotting' Messrs. Catterall, Renard, Fransella, and other leading members of the orchestra as they arrive on the platform, and showing acquaintance by vigorous applause, is largely cultivated, it appears. The conductor received an ovation. In the eyes of a Promenade audience this was his first public appearance since his knighthood, and the event was signalized with an extra-lively demonstration of esteem and affection. The programme was the following:

Irish Rhapsody, No. 1, in D minor (Op. 78) .. ..	Stanford.
Præludium .. ..	Järnfeld.
Suite, 'Peer Gynt' .. ..	Grieg.
Valse Triste .. ..	Sibelius.
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2 .. ..	Liszt.
Overture, 'Rienzi' .. ..	Wagner.
Fantasia on Welsh Melodies .. ..	arr. Sir Henry Wood.
Overture, 'Britannia' .. ..	Mackenzie.

with solo items by Miss Esta d'Arco and Mr. Thorpe Bates (vocalists) and Mr. Albert Fransella (flute). It has been strongly criticised as exemplifying the degeneracy and mechanical building of modern Promenade programmes. But this is to judge it as the programme of a serious 'Symphony' concert in the high season, to compare it with a type to which it was never intended to belong. The Promenades are frankly a popular season, and Saturday night programmes are the most popular of the week. The true comparison is with other forms of popular music-making. By this test, the Promenade programmes become extraordinarily artistic. Rather than condemn their degeneracy, we are disposed to wonder at their maintaining so high a standard. Sir Henry Wood could, of course, give a season of works that would appeal by their novelty, modernity, and historical interest to the jaded critical taste, but he would give it to an empty hall. It is of no use to impart a higher musical education to a public that isn't there. The excellent programme given above was carried out in a manner that greatly pleased the audience. If the playing was a little unequal, there was every excuse for its being so, considering the task that was before the orchestra, and the impossibility of giving full rehearsal to any but the least familiar works in the scheme. Altogether, the concert gave promise that the season's playing would again realise all the executive ability and flexibility to expression that have made the Orchestra's reputation.

On Monday, August 14, the usual Wagner night spectacle was presented. Sir Henry Wood had made a selection of excerpts characterized, on the whole, by brightness, and its cheering influence pervaded the concert. The programme of August 15 contained the 'Leonora' overture No. 3, Elgar's first 'Wand of Youth' suite, Arensky's Pianoforte concerto, Op. 2 (Mr. Edward Goll), Dvorák's 'Slavische' Rhapsody No. 1, and an excerpt from Délibes's 'Coppélia' Ballet music; nobody could complain that it lacked interest.

The first novelty of the season was given on August 16, in the shape of a 'Pavane pour une infante défunte,' by Maurice Ravel. The arch-modernist of France wrote this work with singular restraint. There is little beyond some quaint and pleasing out-of-the-way progressions through ordinary harmonies to disturb the most conservative ear. The piece is based upon a few simple and charming ideas, and moves with a sedate and sweetly mournful grace and an old-world mien that admirably befit the subject. The same concert provided performances of Debussy's 'Danse sacrée et danse profane,' with Mr. Alfred Kastner as harpist, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony—again an interesting evening. The quality of interest was maintained on the following night, when the Orchestra gave their first performance of Svendsen's picturesque legend 'Zorahayda,' a work that one would willingly hear more frequently. In the first classical programme, on August 18, Beethoven's first Symphony occupied its usual position.

On August 19, the second 'popular' programme provided a re-hearing of some former Promenade successes—Scheinplugg's 'Overture to a comedy of Shakespeare,' Jan Blockx's three 'Flemish dances,' and Dr. Walford Davies's fine 'Festal overture.'

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's Variations on 'Three blind mice,' one of his best and most deservedly popular works, was performed on August 22; and on the following night the Waltz from Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier' was heard for the first time in Queen's Hall. It is not distinguished music, but it succeeds in spite of itself by its interesting orchestration and original harmony. On this occasion it succeeded to the extent of being performed twice.

London Concerts.

Mrs. Mary Layton's annual concert, which took place on July 20, was held for the first time at the Fulham Town Hall. One of the chief features was as usual the singing of the Ladies' Choir, who gave amongst other items 'The Madonna's cradle-song' by Colin Taylor, 'Sound sleep' by Vaughan Williams, 'The shepherd's siren' by Stanford, and 'It comes from the misty ages' by Elgar. They also took part in an excerpt from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' Miss Margaret Layton sang Lia's song from Debussy's 'l'Enfant prodige.' Solos were also sung by Misses Ethel Maunder, Winifred Layton-Gaubert, Grace Exton, Ruby Appleton, Betty Dubber, Kate Lane, Fannie Lister, and Mabel Langford. The Stanley Glee Party gave some male-voice part-songs. The accompaniments were played by Mrs. and Miss Layton.

At the orchestral concert given by the Royal College of Music on July 25, the chief work performed was Dvorák's fourth Symphony, a work that is heard less frequently than it deserves. Joachim's Variations in E minor for violin and orchestra, of which Mr. Eugene Goossens gave a masterly interpretation as soloist, added further interest. A complete contrast to the latter work was provided in the shape of the delightful ballet music from Johann Strauss's 'Ritter Pasman.' The vocalists of the concert were Miss Nora Moon and Mr. David Ellis. Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

The first provincial performance of Sir Edward Elgar's second Symphony took place at Harrogate on August 9, under the direction of Mr. Julian Clifforde.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The most startling musical news of the month has been the advertisement in the local Press of the fact that the premises of the Schiller-Anstalt are for sale. However, an attempt is being made to resuscitate the club, and to put it on a sounder footing. Altogether it is improbable that Manchester will be permanently deprived of its services to the community. Established some fifty years since, it would appear to have outlived its utility as a club pure and simple, and yet in our cosmopolitan Manchester life there is more need than ever to-day for some body or association to serve as a medium for the interpretation of German thought and art to Britshers. Prior to the coming of the Midland Hotel and its theatre into our midst, German dramatic companies visited the Schiller each winter; ever since 1886 chamber-music of the highest grade has been heard within its walls, long before our numerous chamber societies were ever thought of. To the Schiller we were indebted for the only visit Strauss ever paid to Manchester, and no quartet or trio of established repute but has enjoyed its hospitality. Mr. Carl Fuchs, its musical director, did not confine his attentions merely to Continental artists, not infrequently deviating boldly from the usual run of chamber concerts, with considerable justification. For instance, it was at these concerts that what has been termed the 'newer choralism' was first heard in Manchester from the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society and the Hanley Caudon choir, then conducted by Mr. John James.

In the ranks of the Hallé band at present there are three or four members (perhaps more!) who have done exceedingly creditable things in the way of composition in the larger forms. In past months allusion has been made to works by Messrs. C. H. Fogg, J. H. Foulds, Maurice Spelman, and F. Bonavia. During the summer season many Manchester music-lovers resort both to Llandudno and Blackpool, where are to be heard first-class orchestras. At Llandudno in the last few weeks Mr. Fogg's overtures in D minor and another labelled 'In sombre woods' have been played, under the composer's direction, by Mr. Arthur W. Payne's orchestra. A like compliment being paid also to a 'Coronation' march by the Preston Parish Church organist, Mr. J. E. Adkins.

Mr. Ferruccio Bonavia has recently completed a Violin concerto, which he played at the Blackpool North Pier concert, on August 11, supported by Mr. Simon Spelman's orchestra. Various Manchester amateurs were present at this 'trial-trip,' and the general impression was decidedly favourable to the new work, the final movement, possibly, suffering in contrast with the sustained beauty of the earlier movements. Not improbably it may be heard in Manchester during the coming winter.

Mention should be made of the success attained recently at Stratford-on-Avon by the children from Oswaldtwistle, in their masque 'The haymakers.' They come from a typical East Lancashire village—part country, part mining, part cotton-spinning and weaving—lying between Blackburn and Burnley, whence has sprung so much Lancashire musical ability.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BURNLEY.—On Sunday, July 30, a massed concert was held in the grounds of Bank Hall in support of the Victoria Hospital, the choir and orchestra numbering 1,500, the singers being drawn from local choirs. The programme consisted of choruses, selections by the combined brass bands, and hymns in which the audience joined. Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank conducted. The audience numbered about 20,000, and the collection realised £270.

CARMARTHEN.—The counties of Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Pembroke held a great united Psalmody Festival in the Eisteddfod Pavilion at Carmarthen on August 16. The choir of 10,000 voices, conducted by Mr. Harry Evans, sang, in addition to hymns, Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb' and 'Hallelujah' Chorus, and Mr. Emyln Evans's 'Eisteddai Teithiwr Blin.' An orchestra of eighty assisted.

MELBOURNE.—The University Conservatorium gave the mid-winter students' concert before an audience which quite filled the Town Hall, on July 11. An excellent orchestra accompanied the numerous concerted items, and the first-fruits of the policy of encouraging the study of wind instruments by offering bursaries were seen in thirteen student-players of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, trumpet and trombone. The programme included movements from Piano-forte concertos by Beethoven, Rubinstein, Grieg, and Tchaikovsky, Violin concertos by De Beriot and Vieuxtemps, a Flute concerto by Mozart, the 'Kreutzer' and a Grieg Sonata for pianoforte and violin, and solos for organ, viola, &c.

NEW BRIGHTON.—The concert given at the Tower, on July 2, was a novel experience to audiences of the district for the choir and orchestra of 125 were conducted by a lady—Madame de Boufflers. The choir, consisting of the Liverpool Ladies' Choir and the Liverpool Vocal Union, were heard in a number of operatic selections, the 'Hallelujah' chorus, and in part-songs. Madame de Boufflers herself sang the soprano part in the 'Inflammatus,' from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' under the conductorship of Mr. T. Rimmer. The bulk of the choral work was undertaken by the Ladies' Choir alone in a way that upheld its distinguished reputation. The orchestra was that of the Tower. Mr. Ralph Smith gave baritone solos, and Miss Maud Hallam and Mr. A. W. Locké supplied accompaniments.

PERTH (W.A.).—A State concert, held under the auspices of the Government of Western Australia, was given by the Perth Philharmonic Society in His Majesty's Theatre during the Coronation festivities on June 23. His Excellency Sir Gerald Strickland, accompanied by Lady Strickland and suite, occupied the viceregal box. The auditorium was filled with a large and brilliant assemblage. The programme comprised Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' the overture and first chorus to Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Handel's 'Hallelujah' chorus, Haydn's 'The heavens are telling,' and the 'Polacca' from Thomas's 'Mignon.' The principals were Miss Fanny Chetham, Miss Minnie Waugh, Miss Rena Sara, Mr. R. M. Jones and Mr. G. C. Haywood. A second quartet from the choir also lent valuable assistance. The second chorus, 'Daughter of ancient kings,' was undoubtedly the gem of the evening; the subdued tone and delicate treatment were so much appreciated that an encore was demanded. With regard to the work of the choir, it is not considered that better choral singing had ever before been heard in the district. An orchestra comprising some forty performers led by Miss Hansen-Knarhoi lent effective assistance, while the organ and pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mr. H. Hadwen-Chandler and Miss Gertie Kelly respectively. At the conclusion of a memorable concert, the society's popular conductor, Mr. Herbert C. Goff, was accorded a great ovation.

SYDNEY.—Several open-air patriotic concerts were given on June 22, under the management of Prof. Theo. S. Tearne, State Superintendent of Music, by the Royal Sydney Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Joseph Bradley), the Balmain District Choral Union and Beale Musical Society (conductor, Prof. Tearne), the Mosman Musical Society (conductor, Mr. A. H. Norman) and by the Professional Musicians' Band (conductor, Mr. A. O'Brien). The choral items, which were performed with orchestral accompaniment, included 'Zadok,' the 'Hallelujah' chorus, the March Chorus from 'Tannhäuser' and 'The glorious British Empire,' by Prof. Tearne.

Mr. C. Egerton Lowe has accepted an appointment as Director of Studies at Madame Hands's Muswell Hill Conservatoire of Music, an institution that is doing excellent work in that district of London.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

Professor Dr. Hermann Kretzschmar has been elected chairman of the Neue Bachgesellschaft in succession to Herr Georg Rietschel.—On July 30 Joseph Bittner's opera, 'Der Musikant,' was performed for the first time in Berlin by the Hagin Opera Company, at the Neues Königliche Operntheater. Although the work was very well received on its production about a year ago in Vienna, it only obtained a succès d'estime in the present instance.—The season at the Royal Opera House was inaugurated on August 13 with a fine performance of Humperdinck's 'Königskinder.'—During next March, two grand concerts devoted to English choral music will be given. The most noteworthy feature will be the first performance in Berlin of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' under the direction of Herr Oscar Fried. Works by Granville Bantock and Frederick Delius are also to be included in the programmes.—It has been decided to erect a Meyerbeer monument in Berlin. An influential committee has been formed for this purpose, including the names of Count von Hülsen-Häseler, Dr. Leopold Schmidt, Kommerzienrat Bock (of the well-known publishing firm, Bote & Bock), Madame Lily Lehmann, Dr. Karl Muck, Professor Siegfried Ochs, Professor Gernsheim, Count von Hochberg, Hugo von Hoffmannsthal, Geheimrat Professor Dr. Kretzschmar, Albert Niemann (the old Wagnerian tenor), Professor Georg Schumann, and Dr. Richard Strauss.

BRESLAU.

On the occasion of the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the University, an impressive performance of Bruckner's 150th Psalm was given, under the direction of Herr Kinkeldey.

BUDA-PEST.

At the Royal National Opera, Richard Strauss's opera, 'Der Rosenkavalier,' was given for the first time, under the direction of Herr Emil Abranzi, with considerable success.

CARLSBAD.

In celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Municipal Theatre, a festival performance of Beethoven's 'Fidelio' was given with great success.

EISENACH.

The Neue Bachgesellschaft announces that the autumn Bach chamber-music festival in Eisenach will take place on September 23 and 24. It is intended to give two chamber-music concerts and a church concert. Prominent artists have already promised their assistance.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.

The eighth meeting of the 'Central Verbandes Deutscher Tonkünstler und Tonkünstler-Vereine' will take place on September 16 and 17 at Frankfurt-on-Main, in the Great Hall of Dr. Hoch's Konservatorium.

HANOVER.

At the last symphony concert of the season, Theodore Dubois's 'Symphonie Française' and Debussy's 'La demoiselle élue' were heard for the first time.

HEIDELBERG.

THE LISZT FESTIVAL.

The annual Festival of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein will take place at Heidelberg from October 22-25. To celebrate the 100th anniversary of the birth of its founder, Franz Liszt, the Festival will be devoted exclusively to his music. The programme has been arranged as follows:—October 22, in the Stadthalle—oratorio 'Christus' (conductor, Professor Philipp Wolfrum). October 23, in the Stadthalle—'Dante' Symphony (conductor, Siegmund von Hausegger); 'Faust' Symphony (conductor, Max Schillings). October 24

(morning), in the aula of the University—Pianoforte sonata in B minor (Mr. Edward Risler); 'Leonore,' ballade by Bürger, with incidental pianoforte accompaniment (reciter, Herr Ernst von Possart); Pianoforte solos—Ballade in B minor, Legends 'Die Vogelpredigt des heiligen Franziskus von Assisi' and 'Der heilige Franziskus auf den Wogen schreitend,' Etude d'exécution transcendente 'Feux follets,' sixth 'Hungarian' Rhapsody (Herr Arthur Friedheim); Songs—'Es muss ein Wunderbares sein,' 'Ueber allen Gipfeln ist Ruh,' 'Ihr Glocken von Marling,' 'Die drei Zigeuner' (Madame Charles Cahier). October 24 (evening), in the Stadthalle.—Symphonic poem, 'Ce qu'on entend sur les montagnes'; Pianoforte concerto in A major (Signor Busoni); two Episodes from Lenau's 'Faust' for full orchestra, 'Der nächtliche Zug,' 'Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke' (Mephisto-Walzer); Variations for organ on the basso-continuo from the first part of the cantata 'Weinen, Klagen, und die Crucifixus from the B minor Mass of J. S. Bach (Herr Philipp Wolfrum); 'Totentanz,' paraphrase on the 'Dies irae' for pianoforte and orchestra (Signor Busoni); symphonic poem 'Tasso, lamento e trionfo' (conductor, Dr. Richard Strauss). October 25 (morning), in the aula of the University—the 129th Psalm, for baritone solo (Mr. Theodor Harrison) and organ; Songs—'Angiolin dal bionde erin,' 'S'il est un charmant gazon,' 'Enfant, si j'étais roi,' 'Comment disaient-ils,' 'Oh quand je dors' (Madame Louise Debogis); Pianoforte solos—'Danse macabre,' 'Saint-Saëns-Liszt, étude 'Au bord d'une source,' 'Tscherkessenmarsch' from 'Rousslan et Ludmilla,' Glinka-Liszt (played by Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns); Songs—'Es rauschen die Winde,' 'Das Veilchen,' 'Wo weit er,' 'Jugendglück' (Frau Johanne Dietz); 'Concerto pathétique' for two pianofortes (Professor James Kwast and Madame Frieda Kwast-Hodapp). October 25 (evening), in the Stadthalle—'Die Glocken des Strassburger Münsters,' for baritone solo, mixed choir, orchestra and organ; Elégie ('Die Zelle von Nonnenwert') for violin and pianoforte; Offertorium from the Hungarian Coronation Mass, for violin and organ (solo violin, Herr Fritz Hirt); 'Hymne de l'enfant à son réveil,' for female choir, harp, pianoforte and organ (solo vocalist, Fräulein Martha Fickler); 'Chor der Engel,' from 'Faust,' for mixed choir, harp, pianoforte and organ; three songs. 'Der Fischerknebe,' 'Der Hirt,' and 'Der Alpenjäger,' from Schiller's 'Wilhelm Tell,' for tenor solo and orchestra (tenor solo, Herr Hans Tänzler); 'Gaudemus igitur,' humoresque for orchestra and choir (conductor, Herr Philipp Wolfrum).

JENA.

The recently founded local branch of the International Musical Society (Professors Stein, Lehmann and Brünings forming the committee) has decided to revive the 'Collegium musicum' for the cultivation of ancient chamber music. Under this name, before 1769, weekly meetings were held at which music-loving University students and professors paid homage to the art.

LUGANO.

The wealthy music-lover, M. Louis Lombard, who for some time past has given and conducted regular orchestral concerts at his Château de Trévano, submitted an interesting programme devoted to Belgian music at his concert on August 6. Among the works included were Edgar Tinel's Overture 'Polyeucte,' Variations Symphoniques by Paul Gilson, Variations and Fugue, Op. 7, by Louis Delune, and Jan Blockx's Danses from the ballet 'Milenska' ('Kermesse,' 'Danse des sabots,' 'Entrée des rhétoriciens,' 'Scène d'amour,' 'Entrée des Zingaris').

METZ.

On August 5, the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the composer Ambroise Thomas, a memorial tablet was unveiled at the house where the artist was born.

MÉZIÈRES (SWITZERLAND).

A series of performances of Gluck's 'Orpheus' was given during the latter part of July at the Théâtre du Jorat, a kind of festival theatre somewhat similar to Bayreuth. The score of the work had been excellently revised by Messrs. Saint-Saëns and Julien Tiersot, and the performances, conducted by Messrs. G. Doret and Gabriel Gromlez, with Mlle. Charbonnel (from the Paris Opéra-Comique) in the title-part, were of the highest merit. The whole scheme met with complete success.

MOSCOW.

The famous double-bass virtuoso and conductor, M. Sergius Kusewitsky, has founded and endowed a new permanent Symphony Orchestra of seventy performers. The association, which is likely to become an important factor in Moscow's musical life, will commence its activities during the coming season.

MUNICH.

The Mozart and Wagner Festival commenced in the Residenz and Prinzregententheater with fine performances of 'Don Giovanni' and 'Tristan und Isolde,' under the conductorship of Messrs. Cortolzi and Otto Lohse.—A cycle of Symphony concerts has been arranged under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Löwe, at the Tonhalle. The programmes of these include Beethoven's nine Symphonies, works by Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Liszt, Berlioz, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Bruckner, Mendelssohn, Weber, Schumann, Wagner, and Richard Strauss.—Under the auspices of Herr Max Reinhardt (of Sumurun fame) special operetta performances have been given with enormous success at the Künstlertheater. Among the works included in the scheme have been Offenbach's 'Die schöne Helene' (given twenty-five times to crowded houses), and a new operetta 'Themidore,' by J. Digby La Touche. The performances and the mise-en-scène were on the highest level.—The State of Bavaria has bought a bust of Richard Strauss by the sculptor Behm. It will be placed temporarily in the Pinakothek, and is ultimately to be included in the national collection of sculpture.—Karl Bleye's latest work, 'Ein Harfen Klang' for alto solo, male choir and orchestra, has been produced with considerable success by the Akademischer Gesangverein.

NAPLES.

A new one-act opera, entitled 'Jancuciro,' composed by Onofrio Altavilla to the libretto of Alberto Colantuani, has been produced recently at the Teatro Mercadente.

PARIS.

The famous Prix de Rome for young composers has this year been awarded to M. Paul Paray. Of the thirty voters on the selection committee, twenty-nine were in his favour. He was born in 1886, and was a pupil of Messrs. Charles Lenepveu and Paul Vidal at the Conservatoire.

PRAGUE.

The season at the Deutsches Landestheater again terminated with festival performances. The works selected included Wagner's 'Tristan und Isolde,' and 'Die Meistersinger,' Mozart's 'Don Giovanni,' Verdi's 'Ballo in Maschera' and 'Rigoletto,' and Ambrose Thomas's 'Hamlet' (the latter four operas in Italian). Among the singers specially engaged were Messrs. van Rooy and Battistini.

PLYMOUTH.

A Bach-Brahms-Reger festival took place on July 20 and 21, with considerable success. A very favourable reception was accorded Herr Max Reger, who conducted the Blüthner Orchestra of Berlin in some of his own works.

ROUEN.

At the Théâtre des Arts some fragments of Lully's opera 'Bellerophon' and his tragic ballet 'Psyché' proved of great interest when recently revived.

WEIMAR.

Two quasi-novelties, Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' and Puccini's 'La Bohème' have been lately included in the repertoire of the Court Opera. Another interesting feature has been a cycle of Lortzing's old comic operas (Spielopern), including 'Zar und Zimmermann,' 'Der Wildschütz,' 'Der Wafenschmied,' 'Undine,' 'Die beiden Schützen' and 'Die Opernprobe.'

ZEPOT (NEAR DANZIG).

At the open-air theatre (Waldbühne) three special performances of Ludwig Thuille's fairy tale opera 'Lobetanz,' have lately been given, under the direction of Dr. Hess. The scheme seems to have been very successful.

Miscellaneous.

Liversidge), Walter E. Lawrence; the

Maude Wilby gold medal (pianoforte), Arthur O. Euley; the Dove memorial prize (for a student distinguished for general excellence and industry), Nellie E. Walker; the August Manns memorial prize, Winifred L. Allan; special prize for solo singing, Lottie Minns; the Libotton memorial prize, John W. Francis. The winners of the school prizes were: pianoforte, divided by Nadine Sutherland and Marie L. Goulden; mezzo-soprano, Gladys Anrum; contralto, Louie MacBean; tenor, William Aspinell; bass, William H. Cox; violin (ladies), Kitty Loveland; violin (gentlemen), Louis Godowski; organ, John Cawley; elocution, Muriel Deighton; accompanying, Dorothy Holden; sight-singing, Mabel Booth; composition, Margery Hope; special medal for elocution, Carl True. Miss Elsie Cora Teale (pianoforte), was awarded the gold medal for the highest total in the School Associateship Examination.

According to the report read at the twenty-second annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music (chairman, Sir William E. Bigge), 5,599 candidates entered for the local centre examinations, as against 5,077 in the previous year. In the advanced grade the passes were 59.62 per cent., and in the intermediate grade 59.64. Of those who passed, honours were taken by ninety-one advanced and seventy-five intermediate candidates, as against seventy-four and seventy-five in the previous year. The number of candidates in the school examinations in the United Kingdom was 19,978, as against 18,679 in the previous year. In view of the great educational importance of the training of the year, the Board had instituted a series of examinations in sight-singing and ear-training, ranging from the primary division of the school examinations up to the advanced grade of the local centre. It was hoped that this new departure would not only draw attention to a subject of great importance to real musical progress but would serve to indicate the lines upon which the training of pupils might be serviceably carried out. It was stated that the syllabus for these examinations was now ready, and that a number of new centres had been established during the year.

The following new ordinance has been passed by the University of Manchester in reference to the degree of Doctor of Music:—‘Graduates of other Universities approved by the Faculty who have obtained a degree substantially equivalent to the degree of Bachelor of Music of this University, and are recommended by the Faculty, will be admitted to the degree of Doctor of Music provided they shall have pursued a course of study in this University during a period of not less than three years. Such graduates shall not be admitted to the degree until four years have elapsed from the date of their first degree in the approved Universities.’ In connection with this ordinance a new course of lectures will open in the first week of October.

Messrs. W. Heffer & Sons, Ltd., of Cambridge, inform us that they have in the Press a new translation of Mozart's opera ‘The Magic Flute’ (Die Zauberflöte), which has been specially prepared by Mr. Edward Dent for a series of performances to take place in Cambridge on December 1 and 2 of this year. The translation is accompanied by a pamphlet by the same author, illustrating the history and interpretation of the work. Besides including information about the libretto and its authors which has not hitherto been accessible in English, as well as some facts which have not previously been published, it will trace the influence of the opera on Beethoven and Goethe.

Mr. Edward Collier of 8, Hornsey Rise, London, N., draws our attention to his scheme of graduated clavers. He points out that juvenile violinists are provided with small instruments to fit their hands, but the youngest pianoforte player is expected to use at once the keyboard of the adult player. He has therefore devised clavers of four progressive gauges, and, as he says, ‘the piano grows with the child.’ There is reason on Mr. Collier's side.

We much regret that in the notice of a reception at Kneller Hall, given on p. 541 of our August issue, Major A. Arthur Stretton, M.V.O., the Director of the Military School, was incorrectly described.

The sum of £172 13s. 7d. was subscribed as a donation to charitable institutions by the public who were admitted to the rehearsals of the Coronation service, and has been distributed among the following institutions: Westminster Female Refuge, the Westminster Abbey Choirboys' Scholarship Fund, the Mary Yolland Home for Incurables, the Infants' Hospital, Vincent Square, the St. Andrew's Club for Working Boys, and the Organists' Benevolent League.

The following course of lectures was arranged to be given at Oxford during the summer meeting of the University extension.—‘Germany's place in the history of music,’ by Mr. Donald Francis Tovey, August 4; ‘Chamber music,’ by Dr. W. H. Hadow, August 5 and 7; ‘Orchestral music and opera,’ by Dr. E. Markham Lee, August 8, 9 and 12; ‘Song,’ by Mr. Walter Ford, August 17; ‘Choral music,’ by Mr. Ernest Newman, August 24 and 25.

The following works have been chosen for performance by the Dulwich Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Julius Harrison, during the coming season:—‘St. Paul,’ Mendelssohn; ‘King Olaf,’ Elgar; ‘Le dernier sommeil de la Vierge,’ Massenet; ‘Pathetic Symphony,’ Tchaikovsky; ‘Merrie England,’ German; ‘Rosalys,’ for female voices, Harrison; ‘Stabat Mater,’ Dvorák.

The vacation school of English folk-songs and dances held under Mr. Cecil Sharp's direction in connection with the Summer Shakespeare Festival at Stratford-upon-Avon, has been highly successful. We learn that over 200 teachers attended. In our next issue we hope to give an account of the work of the school.

Mr. Sam Hemsall, a tenor singer well-known in Yorkshire, was married recently in Leeds to Miss Rachel James, who is also a professional vocalist. The couple, to whom we tender our best wishes, will sing at Bournemouth at the coming production of Mr. Edward German's ‘Merrie England.’

The Senior Medal of the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School has been awarded to Miss Maud Randle, of Leicester (Miss Susan Holden being highly commended); The Junior Medal to Miss Evangeline Livens, of Sutton (Master Egerton Tidmarsh highly commended). The adjudicator was Miss Gertrude Peppercorn.

We are informed that Mr. Lionel Tertis will play B. J. Dale's Suite for viola and orchestra at the first concert of the Amsterdam Orchestra, on September 10, under the conductorship of Herr Mengleberg.

Madame Ada Crossley, who is making an extensive tour of South Africa, has everywhere received enthusiastic receptions. She returns to England in time to fulfil her autumn season engagements.

Signor Leoncavallo has undertaken to direct the presentation of an abridged version of ‘I Pagliacci’ at the Hippodrome. He will bring his own company and orchestra from Italy.

An orchestral society has been formed in Berlin consisting of medical men and their wives and daughters. Dr. Pollak, an ophthalmic surgeon, is conductor.

The firm of P. Jurgenson, of Moscow, the largest music-publishing house in Russia, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation on August 23.

On the twenty-fifth anniversary of Liszt's death, a small Liszt museum was opened, in the cottage where he was born, at the village of Raiding in Hungary.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W., not later than

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

(FIRST POST).

Answers to Correspondents.

ORGAN (Jarrow).—You inquire how long it would take you to obtain the Associate Diploma of the R.C.O. How can you expect us to answer such a question? If you work ten minutes a week you may succeed in a hundred years or so. If you have good capacity and can work hours every day you may succeed in a year or two.

VOX HUMANA.—We know nothing regarding the working of the examining institution to which you refer. The heads of the profession have nothing to do with it. Our opinion is that you should seek credentials from one of the well-known and generally recognized institutions.

MISS LEFROY.—Novello & Co. have a Library for lending music, address 160, Woudour Street. You ask us to recommend an amateur musical society in the small town you write from in Ireland, but are you not better able than us to find what you want?

GEORGE DODDS (Newcastle).—All the transactions of the International Musical Congress held recently in London will be published in one volume, and the names of all associated with the undertaking will be given.

G. R. PATTISON.—We are sorry we do not see our way to giving the names of the members of the International Musical Congress shown in the illustration given in our July number.

CYRIL CANTRELL.—Sawyer on 'Extemporization,' Warriner on 'Transposition,' Farry's 'Summary of Musical History,' all in Novello's 'Primer Series,' and Grove's 'Dictionary of Music' would meet your requirements.

VERDI WADDINGTON (Northgate, Cleckheaton) wants to know where a photograph of Mr. E. H. Lemarc, seated at the organ he recently opened at Hull Town Hall, is to be obtained.

J. CAMPBELL.—You had better apply to Rudall, Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London, W., for a second-hand Boehm clarinet.

B FLAT.—Apply as above.

T. C. JOWETT.—Your keyboard plan is interesting. We are sorry we do not see our way to deal with it at present.

- |  |                  |         |
| *GREAT IS THE LORD. Just published .. .. .   | 9th 1000         | 3d.     |
| Opens with a broad, majestic and powerful chorus. This is followed by a sweet Soprano Solo (or Sop. Full) which leads to some spirited and imitative movements for the different voices, with beautiful modulations. |                  |         |
| *THE LORD THY GOD HATH BLESSED THEE. New .. .. .   | 15th 1000        | 4d.     |
| Contains a rolling Bass Solo, a Sop. or Tenor Solo, with bold and interesting choruses, also a soft chorus which would be extremely effective as a quartet.  |                  |         |
| *SEEDTIME AND HARVEST. New .. .. .   | 12th 1000        | 3d.     |
| An attractive Anthem, easy, melodious, and full of inspiration.  |                  |         |
| *THOU VISITEST THE EARTH .. .. .   | 17th 1000        | 4d.     |

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND

ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."

—Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of the kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and as we have intimated, it is every one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favoured 'Holy City' we have intimated, but we never, Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt 4s.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND

ORCHESTRA

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few Cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall."

—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'" —Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Shields Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.;
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each, 1s.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 6s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

THE UNISON CHANT CHOIR-BOOK.

A Collection of Original Chants Designed to Encourage Congregational Singing

BY

ARTHUR W. POLLITT AND E. BRYSON.

2s. 6d. net.

Extract from a letter from an Australian Vicar and Cathedral Precentor (M.A., Mus. Bac. Oxon.), August 16, 1910:—

"Some months ago a traveller brought out a few samples of your Unison Chant Choir-Book, which so struck me that I almost at once adopted this plan in my church for singing the Psalms. I had long been on the lookout for such a book, because I have felt that the usual 4-part harmony tunes are a bad medium for the expression of congregational worship. I am delighted with the result . . . the Psalms never go badly, however poor the choir, and I find that at my Wednesday evening service, when there is no choir at all, it is quite possible to sing a Psalm and the Canticles to some of your tunes . . . The effect is (to my mind) very fine indeed. It gives an impression of bigness and breadth, which is altogether wanting in average Anglican chant singing."

Musical Times:—"To those who feel that the highest form of worship is obtained by congregational singing, the work before us will no doubt make a strong appeal. The vocal part of the chants is of low pitch, and generally of small compass and diatonic progression, and consequently easily grasped by the congregation. . . . The book is evidently the result of conscientious thought and high ideal."

Musical Standard:—"A book of uncommon interest to organists.

. . . And I think it is destined to attract a good deal of attention, firstly, because it is essentially useful; and, secondly, because it is an innovation."

Record:—"These chants may be recommended to churches which cannot command the services of a four-part choir. Most of the chants are broad, diatonic melodies, well written, attractive, and of suitable compass."

Yorkshire Post:—"The chants are simple and broad, well suited for their purpose . . . The idea underlying is a thoroughly sound one, for it points to the way in which congregational singing of the Psalms may become a practical and artistic reality, instead of being a most unsatisfactory subterfuge."

Aberdeen Free Press:—"The book is on admirable lines, although the reformation which it is designed to follow may be slow in coming."

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety, and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

THE CONCOURS D'OPÉRA IN PARIS.

BY MISS CECILIA HILL.

It was in July that I went to Paris sanguine with hope, confident of success, in order to study and imitate the organization of the public competitions taking place annually in opéra and opéra-comique by the students of the 'Conservatoire National de Musique et de Déclamation.' Some account of these proceedings (in many ways remarkable to an English observer) may be of interest.

To begin with, it must be remembered that the Conservatoire is an institution supported by the State (where students receive their instruction and entire intellectual and artistic equipment free of all expense), and that its methods and results are consequently freely exposed to the fierce light of public criticism and observation. Students are admitted to study at the Conservatoire only after examination before a jury, and if after three years they emerge with a Premier Prix, or even a minor distinction, success in their professional career is practically assured. Competitions in every form of instrumental and vocal music as well as in 'déclamation' (by which is meant scenes of tragedy and comedy from classic authors) take place annually in public, in the Odéon Theatre, one of the largest in Paris. Admission to listen is a privilege eagerly sought after (the tickets being given, not sold), and the proceedings are carefully followed and reported upon by the newspapers.

The first competitions I attended were those of scenes from opéra-comique. By this the French understand all operas cast in a small scale, not requiring large crowds or great pageants. In many cases they are not comic, are of extreme artistic interest and importance, and are acted in our own Covent Garden as grand opera. The Odéon was crowded to overflowing, the jury of ten judges (M. Gabriel Fauré, director of the Conservatoire, presiding, and Saint-Saëns, Alfred Bruneau and Claude Debussy being amongst the number) sat in a large omnibus-box facing the stage, with a table in the centre, a bell to ring as a signal to begin, and all the paraphernalia of our English competitions. The proceedings began at noon and continued, with two extremely short intervals, till 7.30 in the evening. There were thirty-two candidates, each having an entire scene, on the singing and acting of which the student is judged, the subsidiary parts, or 'répliques,' being assigned to other students, who thus have an opportunity of appearing several times before the judges. These 'répliques' are eagerly sought after and very carefully studied. Most of the competitors appear three years running at the public concours, gaining successively an 'accessit,' a second prize, and a first.

It may be of interest to quote the operas from which scenes were taken:—'Hansel et Grétel' (Humperdinck), 'Le Roi d'Ys' (Lalo), 'Le Roi malgré lui' (Chabrier), 'Philemon et Baucis' (Gounod), 'Griseldis' (Massenet), 'Carmen' (Bizet), 'Mireille' (Gounod), 'Le Barbier de Seville' (Rossini), 'Le Chemineau' (Leroux), 'Fortunio' (Massenet), 'La Navarraise' (Massenet), 'Manon' (Massenet), 'Le Rêve' (Bruneau), 'Galathée' (Victor Massé), 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann' (Offenbach), 'La Vie de Bohème' (Puccini), 'Louise' (Charpentier), 'Werther' (Massenet), 'Figaro' (Mozart), 'La Jolie Fille de Perth' (Bizet), 'Lakmé' (Délibes), 'Le Médecin malgré lui' (Gounod), 'La Reine Fiammette' (Leroux).

A glance at this list will demonstrate the large répertoire, with which the students, the judges and the audience all appeared equally familiar. How many of these interesting works would be more than mere names to an Englishman even of musical taste?

The proceedings once begun, there was not a dull moment. Scenes of burlesque comedy from the 'Médecin malgré lui,' performed with admirable spirit and humour, innocent fun from 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann,' lurid tragedy from 'La Navarraise,' charm and joy from 'Mireille,' all succeeded each other with bewildering rapidity. The competitors, whose ages were announced on the programme and appeared to be all between twenty and thirty, were for the purposes of adjudication merely divided into 'Hommes' and 'Femmes.' There was no distinction of voices, and there was no exact limit to the number of first and second prizes, or of first and second 'accessits' (a term apparently corresponding with our own 'highly commended'). Many of the singers had been judged two or three days before in the 'Concours de Chant,' on the technical merits of their singing pure and simple, the production and quality of their voices. Here was the fiery furnace of both tasks, to join their music to their dramatic talent, to sing and act well at the same time.

It is not my intention to offer any criticisms; but as was to be expected (with any knowledge of the methods of voice-production taught in the Conservatoire) in most cases the acting, the dramatic talent, was superior to the actual singing. Many of the singers appeared familiar to the public, their respective chances of success being freely discussed by the newspapers beforehand. Amongst the young Frenchmen it was very interesting to see an immense Englishman, an amiable giant with golden locks, of the name of Hopkins. The Conservatoire admits one foreigner every year into this class. Mr. Hopkins has a charming voice and acts with distinction. The scene assigned to him was a selection from 'Le Roi malgré lui.' He had an excellent reception, and was well-spoken of in the papers. 'Who is this enormous Englishman, with "la taille d'un Hercule, et la figure d'un chérubin?" Shall we hear him at Covent Garden or in our magnificent new opera house in Kingsway?

The machinery of the competitions was eminently practical and simple. The furniture was of the simplest, and could almost be described as symbolic; a sofa where the attitude required it, a handful of straw, a mirror, a table, or a chair—all being expeditiously changed between the scenes. The only accessory which appeared to me absolutely unnecessary—

(in that we were all provided with detailed programmes) was a melancholy gentleman in an evening dress-coat who walked on to the platform in the intervals to announce the next proceedings. The accompaniments were played throughout on a pianoforte. The women students were dressed with simple elegance in ordinary clothes, with here and there a suggestion to indicate their parts, the men were in plain dress clothes—all presenting very much the same appearance as they would at a morning rehearsal in an opera house or theatre. The attitude of the audience throughout was that of concentrated interest and attention, but was also extremely critical even to mercilessness; people being ready to burst out with childlike enjoyment into the merriest peals of laughter at the smallest hitch in the performances, and expressing scorn or disapproval as openly as warm praise. Truly no young singer could ever again fear a more searching ordeal!

As the day wore on, the theatre became more crowded, the heat and excitement more intense. Finally, just before seven, the last of the thirty-two scenes was over, and the jury retired to consider their awards. After what seemed an interminable absence of three-quarters of an hour they returned, and M. Gabriel Fauré (amidst a scene of excitement that bordered on riotous approval or anger from the audience) announced the winners. Of the twelve men who competed two had 'Premier Prix,' none had a second, and Mr. Hopkins gained a 'Premier Accessit' (it was his first year). Of the twenty-two women competitors three gained 'Premier Prix,' two gained second prizes, and there were numerous 'Accessits.'

The foregoing account makes it unnecessary for me to give full account of the competitions in 'opera' (or grand opera, as we should call it) which took place three days later on exactly the same lines. It will suffice if I give the names of the operas from which the scenes were taken: 'Le Cid' (Massenet), 'Hérodiade' (Massenet), 'Faust' (Gounod), 'L'Africaine' (Meyerbeer), 'Samson et Dalila' (Saint-Saëns), 'Mefistofele' (Boito), 'Aïda' (Verdi), 'La Favorite' (Donizetti), 'L'Attaque du Moulin' (Bruneau), 'Don Juan' (Mozart), 'Le Trouvère' (Verdi), 'Les Troyens à Carthage' (Berlioz), 'Salammbô' (Reyer), 'Thaïs' (Massenet), 'Hamlet' (Thomas), 'Freischütz' (Weber), and 'Otello' (Verdi).

I had gone to Paris with the airy hope of introducing good operatic competitions into an English Festival. I came away deeply impressed, and deeply discouraged. I realised the existence of a strongly rooted operatic tradition in France, in a nation naturally dramatic, where song and dance and rhythmic movement seem the natural expression of emotion. This inborn tendency is carefully fostered, guided, and disciplined by the leaders in art, with the powerful protection of the State. To go to the Opéra is a habit acquired from earliest childhood, representations at popular prices are frequently given for the people. In every musical household rows of opera pianoforte scores fill the bookshelves, and to read through a 'partition' is a favourite amusement. The French grow up almost unconsciously familiar with a very large and varied repertoire of opera. The audience that filled the Opéra had the traditions of these concours d'opéra handed down to them for many generations, they themselves had seen them many times; the whole public reads and hears of them, they take place in all local conservatoires in provincial towns. The very judges themselves had probably been competitors in their youth.

It is this familiarity, this prevailing 'atmosphere' which we want. The heroic and magnificent efforts of Mr. Beecham were wasted on a nation that has no ears to hear. That popular taste can be educated is amply proved by the vast audience that listens to Brahms and Wagner at the Promenade Concerts. It is too late to create a sincere love of opera in the present generation. Excellent scattered efforts are being made by individual enterprise, to form classes for the study of opera; but all this is not enough. There must be more and more. We must train the young. If our great musical academies have done their duty in this direction, and enthusiastic lovers and patient students of opera stream from their doors every year, then it is the duty of all music teachers of all local schools to do the same, so that the taste shall filter down into every corner. I hear with joy that a class for operatic competition has been included in the programme of the coming Blackpool Festival. All lovers of opera must rejoice at this, and hope that their example may be followed throughout the length and breadth of the land.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.—August 8, 9, 10, 11.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE.)

During the last National Eisteddfod held at Carmarthen in 1867, it rained incessantly. This year, most fortunately, the Eisteddfod opened, continued, and ended in brilliant weather. No prettier spot than the Park could have been chosen, and the special pavilion which had been erected at a cost of £1,300 was an admirable structure in every way, and capable of seating 13,500 people. The natural slope enabled the audience at the back to see and hear quite easily, and also safeguarded any possibility of a repetition of the Swansea catastrophe in 1907. The brass band competitions were this year held on the Monday preceding the actual Eisteddfod proceedings. The principal choral event was held on the opening day, in the presence of a very large, though not over-crowded audience. Four choirs had entered for the prizes of £150 and £40, but only three made an appearance. The small entry was no doubt mainly due to the difficulties of two of the test-pieces, and the mistake of the music-committee in announcing that the Bach unaccompanied motet would be sung 'with orchestral accompaniment.' Dr. Walford Davies, in his remarks, referred to the selection of music as epoch-making in the history of the Welsh Eisteddfod. That may be true, but the selection was nevertheless unwise, for the reason that Welsh choirs have not had the necessary graded training, either technically or in the interpretative sense, to realise and master such music as Cornelius's 'O, death, thou art the tranquil night,' and the Bach motet for double chorus, 'Be not afraid.' The remaining piece was the delicate part-song 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' by Mr. Emlyn Evans, which has often done service at Eisteddfodau. None of the choirs reached the high level of the 1898 Eisteddfod in this part-song. The Brynamman and District Choral Society (Mr. Edward Evans) sang first, and it was fairly clear at the outset that the splendid tone of this choir would probably be its most valuable asset. In the part-song there was much to admire in the gradation of tone and the tapering of the cadences, but the singing was a little inflexible, and curiously enough not quite accurate. The utterance was first-rate, and the intonation good. The Cornelius piece was very promising at first, but the tonality soon got insecure, and it was evident that for some reason the choir was not able to express all it felt. The impressive tenuto phrases were a little detached, and the climax was not quite successfully achieved. The tenor solo was admirably sung, and occasionally there was 'mood.' The Bach motet was taken at a rather quick pace, and the pitch was forced up nearly a semitone in the first two pages. The music had been well learned, and the execution was very good, but there was some absence of vitality and grip, in spite of some broad-toned cadences, and the texture was not sufficiently clear. The high pitch also militated against the comfort of the sopranos. The outstanding features were the precision in attack and the first-rate utterance.

The Dowlais Choir (Mr. W. J. Watkins), which followed, sang the part-song with more fluency and the cadences were beautifully treated, but the intonation was insecure. The sopranos lacked unity, and the tenors were not always blendful. The opening of the Cornelius was in the right mood, the contrasted phrases were admirably treated, and up to the entry of the tenor solo the interpretation was beautiful in its emotional tenderness. Then a most curious thing happened. The choir had gone up in pitch, and the tenor soloist took up his solo in the proper key (presumably by the aid of a tuning fork): the effect was disastrous, and most unfortunate for the choir. However, they recovered, and in spite of some awkwardness in the modulations, and the rather juvenile tone of the upper voices, there were some striking effects, notably in the important tenuto phrases. The Bach motet was taken at the right pace, and there was considerable rhythmic force and fluent phrasing; although the tone was not as good as that of the previous choir, the part-singing was clearer, the phrasing better-controlled, and the climaxes more effective. There was a tired feeling in the tone towards the end; and the upper voices generally lacked resonance.

There was some delay before the appearance of the Southport Choir (Mr. Tattersall). They had journeyed for eight hours in the intense heat, and were accorded a most enthusiastic reception by the vast audience. The part-song was sung with better tone and intonation than either of the preceding choirs, the contralto tone being superb, but the interpretation was heavy and unromantic. In the Cornelius piece it was soon evident that they were not in anything like their best form. The attack was loose, the pace erratic, and in spite of some good sostenuto and one beautiful cadence, the singing had none of the intimate expressiveness of the previous choir, and after the tenor solo the singing was uncertain for a couple of pages. The balance of tone was not good in the Bach, altos and basses being much more voluminous than the other parts, and the tenor tone was somewhat unmusical. There was very little assurance in the singing. This, no doubt, was due to the natural exhaustion after the long journey. The wonder was that the choir was able to sing at all under such trying circumstances.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who delivered the award, caused some surprise by announcing that the judges had decided upon a maximum of 100 marks for the first two pieces, on account of their 'similarity of character' (?), and a maximum of 100 for the Bach piece.

Still more surprising was the statement that the Brynamman choir evidently started the Bach piece a semitone above the pitch. Had they done such an irregular thing it should have been enough to disqualify them. The award in marks was as follows:

				Marks.
Brynamman ...	(a & b) 86 ...	(c) 91	=	177
Dowlais ...	(a & b) 82 ...	(c) 87	=	169
Southport ...	(a & b) 84 ...	(c) 86	=	170

Dr. Davies explained that the judges were not unanimous as to the second prize.

The Brynamman choir has a splendid record. In 1905, at the Mountain Ash National Eisteddfod, they won the chief choral prize in an excellent competition; on that occasion their singing reached the highest level of the National Eisteddfod, and they were clearly the winners.

The 'second choral' competition took place on August 9. Choirs of from 60 to 80 voices were asked to sing 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' (Brahms) and a part-song, 'Oh! tranquil night' (E. T. Davies). Thirteen choirs had entered for the prizes of £40 and £10, but six of these did not put in an appearance. The singing was not to the taste of the public, as the pavilion was gradually more than half emptied before the end of the competition. The Brahms proved to be beyond most of the choirs, and there was a good deal of bad intonation and nervous attack. Generally speaking, the singing of the part-song was much better, and the Briton Ferry, Newcastle Emyln, and Llanelly choirs were especially good. These choirs were superior to the others in purity, blend and balance, and there was not the exaggerated expression which marred the singing of other choirs. Dr. Walford Davies announced the result as follows:

			Brahms.	Part-song.	Marks.
1st.	Trecynon ...	...	81 ...	78	= 159
2nd.	Briton Ferry ...	...	82 ...	92	= 174
	Pentre ...	...	82 ...	77	= 159
	Carmarthen ...	...	69 ...	69	= 138
	Newcastle Emyln ...	...	85 ...	90	= 175
	Llanelly ...	...	84 ...	87	= 171
	Ton ...	...	78 ...	81	= 159

Thursday (August 10) was 'chairing day,' and the expectation of Mr. Lloyd George as President drew great crowds. The Pavilion was packed, and thousands promenaded in the beautiful park. Keen disappointment was expressed at the non-appearance of the Chancellor, but enthusiasm ran as high as ever during the ceremony of chairing the successful bard, who this year was neither preacher, professor nor schoolmaster, but a dairyman from Llangolli.

A madrigal competition for parties of sixteen was a disappointing affair, three parties appearing out of six entries. The fine madrigal, 'All creatures now are merry-minded' (Benet), and especially Morley's 'Fire, fire my heart,' would have provided excellent test-pieces for the large choirs or for the second choral, if not for the chief choral competitions. The award was in favour of Bwlth (86 marks), the remaining choirs from Pwll and Abertawe receiving 84 and 82 marks respectively.

Some excellent singing was heard in the class for ladies' choirs of from 25 to 40 voices. The test-pieces were (a) 'From the green heart of the waters' (Coleridge-Taylor) and (b) 'Shepherd song' (Bryceson Treharne). The prize was £20. Ten choirs appeared out of fifteen entries, and they sang in the following order: Llanelly, Pembroke Dock, Cardigan, Tredegar, Cardiff, Troedyrhiw, Bangor, Neath, Treboeth (Swansea) and Carmarthen. There was no doubting the superiority of the Cardigan choir in tone, technique and expression, and they were clearly the winners. No marks were given. It is well-known that some of the judges this year do not favour the system of judging by marks.

The competition for male-choirs attracted a large crowd on Friday, and all the ten choirs appeared. The absence of English choirs robbed the competition of the usual excitement, and with the exception of the Swansea choraleists, the choirs were not of high repute. The test-pieces were (a) 'Walpurga' (Hegar) and (b) 'Peace, be still' (Jenkins). The prize was £50. 'Walpurga' was a severe test. There were many unmusical effects heard in the difficult modulations, and the intonation was troublesome in most of the choirs. Two choirs stood out clearly as being better equipped, and there was no doubt that the Bargeld Teify choir gave the most musical and expressive performances, whilst the Ebenezer Mission were a good second. The remaining choirs were Swansea and District Male-choir, Pontardawe, Barry, Neath and District, Maritime (Pontypridd), Morriston, Garw, and Kenfig Hill. The judge (Dr. Protheroe) gave no marks, so that eight of the choirs do not know their relative positions.

The striking feature in all the choral competitions has been the triumph of the West Wales choirs over those of the populous industrial centres. The country choirs will be greatly encouraged, and the Glamorganshire choirs will have to mend their ways.

The solo competitions provided the only too usual discrepancy between entries and attendances. On the first day: basses, 16 out of 29; mezzo-sopranos, 27 out of 40; duettists, 14 out of 33; and of quartettes, 3 out of 10, appeared. There were as usual a great many excellent voices, but no performance of exceptional merit, and no discovery of talent was made. The instrumental competitions were not generally of a very high level, with the exception of an excellent pedal harp competition, when ten most promising harpists played. The chamber music was played under the distressing conditions of constant chatter and promenading. In future these classes should be judged in a smaller room, a counsel of perfection which for many years has been more often given than followed. Dr. Walford Davies said that the winner of the competition for the composition of two movements for small orchestra was a 'modern Schubert.' He turned out to be Mr. Maldwyn Price, junr., of Welshpool.

The prize-winners in the various classes were :

Soprano solo.—Miss Edith Davies (Wrexham).
 Mezzo-soprano solo.—Madame Sylvia Hosgood (Cardiff).
 Contralto solo.—Miss Ceridwen Price (Rhydney).
 Tenor solo.—Mr. G. Edgar Thomas (Pencalawdd).
 Baritone solo.—Mr. D. Boddycome (Pontardawe).
 Bass solo.—Mr. B. Halkyn Roberts (Holywell).
 String quartette.—Misses Smith, Netta and Nina Rochard and Anthony (all of Cardiff).

Pianoforte solo (open class).—1st, Miss Vera McCoombe (Cardiff) ; 2nd, Miss Hetty Morris (Swansea).

Violin solo.—Mr. Alfred Jones (Cardiff).

Violoncello solo.—Miss B. Jones (Pontardawe) and Mr. G. Thomas (Cwmavon), divided prize.

Sextette (pianoforte, oboe, flute, clarinet, bassoon and horn), one entry.—Mr. Percy Smith's sextette.

Cornet solo.—Mr. T. Morris (Gwaencagurwen).

Pedal harp solo.—Miss Nancy Davies (Efail Isaf, Pontypridd).

Celtic harp solo.—Miss Freda Holland (Birkenhead), and Master Fred Roberts (Llandrindod).

The evening concerts were well attended, those on Tuesday and Friday providing miscellaneous and mainly ballad programmes, whilst the Wednesday and Thursday concerts were choral and orchestral. The programme on Wednesday consisted of compositions by native composers. At one meeting Miss Theodora Brookes, of Bangor (a pupil of Miss Childs) played upon the chromatic harp and was awarded a gold medal.

Mr. Cyril Jenkins, who brought his own choir from Treorik, was responsible for the first performance of his short ballad for tenor solo (sung by Mr. Gwynne Davies), chorus and orchestra, entitled 'Lochinar.' The work shows distinct promise on the vocal side. The orchestration is a little immature, and some of the band parts evidently need correction, but in spite of the obvious inspiration of a more famous 'Ride,' the work made a good effect and the composer was recalled.

Mr. Harry Evans's romantic cantata, 'Dafydd ap Gwilym,' which was first produced at the Llangollen National Eisteddfod in 1908, has since had several performances, but this performance was unquestionably the best yet given of the work. The Eisteddfod choir (which had been admirably prepared by the veteran conductor, Mr. R. C. Jenkins) sang superbly, and their singing was the feature of the whole week's work. The soloists (Miss Amy Evans, Miss Gladys Roberts, Mr. David Ellis, and Mr. David Hughes) had previously sung the work, and were all at their best. The orchestra, led by Mr. Angle, was alert and responsive, and there was great enthusiasm in the audience. Mr. Harry Evans conducted.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, Mr. D. C. Williams's effective 'Psalms of praise' (conducted by Mr. R. C. Jenkins) had to be cut considerably, but here again the choir did conspicuously good work.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed on Thursday evening, the principals being Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Ivor Foster. Mr. R. C. Jenkins conducted.

The financial success of the Festival is assured. The Eisteddfod once more proved to be the Mecca of Welshmen, and in spite of its shortcomings the old institution is full of vitality ; its grip of the sentiment of the whole nation is unmistakable.

The results of the junior choral competitions are given in THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

GLASGOW.

- A full report of the competition held on June 23, 24, an account of which appeared in our August number has been issued by the committee. Dr. McNaught, the chief adjudicator, supplies the following general remarks :

I have the honour to submit a few remarks on the Glasgow Festival as a preface to the detailed report.

I congratulate the promoters on the extraordinary success that attended their missionary efforts. The ability with which vocal music, and especially choral music, is cultivated in the area appealed to me, and on this occasion was strikingly exemplified. It was doubly interesting to compare so many excellent choirs with one another, and the general results with those attained at leading English Competitive Festivals. My conclusion is that the best mixed-voice choirs heard at Glasgow were of the first grade and fit to enter the lists against English choirs of great repute. Perhaps some patriotic critics will think that this goes without saying, but it may as well be recorded that the experience of the Glasgow Festival confirms the belief. It is true that the tests used at Glasgow were not so formidable and searching as those used in the chief classes at, say, Morecambe and Blackpool. But there is no good reason to presume that the best equipped and led Scottish choirs could not cope with the extraordinary difficulties presented by much of our modern choral music if they set themselves to the task.

The quality of the tone was generally musical and sometimes beautifully blended,—an indication of the unification of vowel colour—and the enunciation was nearly always good. The resonance at climaxes did not display conspicuous rich sonority, but there was much to admire in the finish and delicacy of the execution, and it was obvious that the best choirs were plastic in the hands of their conductors. The paramount claims of appropriate rhythmic treatment and of interpretation were variously met. Laudable efforts to get behind the mere notes and to discover a message in the music were frequent. But I found myself seriously at variance with some of the readings presented. My opinion of such matters is, of course, simply an individual one : but I happened to be the judge, and obviously it was the only opinion I could possibly offer. Bad or good, it was unbiased, and derived from the collated experience of hearing hundreds of the best choirs in the four nations.

In assessing choral performance much credit must always be given to originality in treatment and to sincere expression of temperament in interpretation. But surely no one can maintain that every capricious alteration of the rhythmic factors of a piece and every eccentricity of treatment must therefore be accepted and admired. There must be some approximate standards, some limits to unrestraint. Rubato is fascinating when it is finely applied, but it is a snare for the ultra-sentimental.

A modern art part-song, as for instance Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West,' has certain tonal and rhythmic factors—the latter often delicately poised—and certain dynamical contrasts. These together form the composer's conception of the musical expression of the poem, which it is the first duty of an interpreter to study and assimilate. To destroy one factor—the rhythm—and to substitute a meticulous verbal expression that ignores the composer's plain directions is not interpretation—it is editing and revision. If this view is not reasonable, then the choirs I placed first—and for whose artistic performances I expressed almost unstinted admiration—should have been at the bottom of the list.

In the Open Challenge Cup Class for Male-Voice Choirs, the appearance of some English organizations turned out to be a stimulating feature. The Scottish male-voice choirs certainly have something to learn from those on the other side of the border.

The school choir-singing was on the whole good, but rarely first-rate. There was here, as elsewhere, a failure to appreciate the musical value of the rhythmic factor. Tonal effects were striven for without sufficient regard for their disturbing effect on the rhythm. Of the juvenile choirs, Thornwood School (Mr. James Sinton), St. George's Co-operative Choir (Mr. William Wilson), and St. Mary's Cathedral Choir Boys (Mr. G. T. Pattman) all gave excellent performances that were free from exaggeration and had due rhythmic and expressive interest.

The influence on chorallists and conductors of a gathering at which so many well-constituted and well-led choirs were heard, not merely by a judge but by one another, must be very great and beneficial. Disappointment, after conscientious and strenuous efforts, was inevitable, but there was always the lesson to be gained by all who were open to learn.

HOW LOVELY ARE THY DWELLINGS.

First system of the musical score. It consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "soul ev - er long - eth and faint - eth sore for the blest long - eth and faint - eth, and faint - eth for the blest - eth, and faint - eth for the blest - eth and faint - eth, faint - eth sore for the blest". The piano part features a flowing accompaniment with dynamic markings f and p.

Second system of the musical score. The lyrics are: "courts of the Lord; my heart and courts of the Lord; my heart and courts of the Lord; my heart and courts of the Lord; my heart and". The piano part continues with a similar accompaniment, marked with p and fp. A section marked B is indicated at the end of the system.

Third system of the musical score. The lyrics are: "flesh do cry to God, cry to the liv - ing flesh do cry to God, cry to the liv - ing God, flesh do cry to God, cry to the liv - ing God, flesh do cry to God, cry to the liv - ing God, flesh do cry to God, cry to the liv - ing God,". The piano part features a more active accompaniment with dynamic markings fp and f. The system concludes with a final chord and a page number (5) in parentheses.

OCTOBER 1, 1911.

FRANZ LISZT.

OCTOBER 22, 1811—JULY 31, 1886.

I.

For most English people Liszt is still merely the greatest of pianists, the composer of a few rather showy pianoforte pieces, and the expert arranger of Hungarian melodies. Few have any idea of the great range of his activities, or of the extent of his influence upon modern music. Some notion of the quantity and scope of his musical work may be had from the programmes for this year's festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein, which, appropriately enough, celebrates on October 22 at once the centenary of Liszt's birth and the fiftieth year of his foundation of the Society. The festival, which is to be held at Heidelberg, will be devoted entirely to the compositions of Liszt; there will be four concerts of choral, orchestral and organ music and two of pianoforte and vocal music. Even this does not cover more than a third or a quarter of the total output of Liszt; so that it is clear that whatever value the world may ultimately put upon his music, the mere quantity and variety of it at any rate entitle him to respectful consideration as a composer. Of his literary activity some idea may be gathered from the new edition of his prose works by Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, which, though not containing all he wrote, runs to nearly a thousand closely printed pages. Such a man is not to be summed up hastily in his centenary year in the current superficial formulæ of people who are probably not acquainted with the hundredth part of his whole work. And it is only when we put Liszt the pianist on one side—accepting him as a unique and dazzling phenomenon—and concentrate our gaze on Liszt the composer, the author, the conductor, and the man of action, that we can realise how much the progressive forces in music have owed to him during the last half-century. A short biography of him will perhaps enable us to see him and his work in better focus and clearer definition.

II.

Franz Liszt was born at Raiding, in Hungary, on October 22, 1811. His father, Adam Liszt, was a steward of Prince Esterhazy; he was himself musical, and only worldly prudence had sent him, much against his will, into a business career. From him the boy Franz, who early showed musical talent, received his first pianoforte lessons at about the age of six. He was evidently marked out for a pianist; he learned easily, his fingers were extraordinarily strong and supple, and his memory, ear, and sight-reading already remarkable. At the age of nine he played at a concert in Oedenburg, giving Ries's E flat major Concerto and an improvisation of his own. His success at this and one or two later concerts was sufficient to enable Adam Liszt to induce certain Hungarian noblemen to guarantee 600 florins yearly for six years in order that the child might pursue his studies elsewhere. His father took him to Vienna and placed him under Czerny and Salieri, the former for pianoforte playing, the latter for harmony and general musical instruction. His performance of Hummel's A minor Concerto at a concert on December 1, 1822, gave all who heard it an intuition that a new star of the first magnitude had risen. At a later concert, on April 13, 1823, Beethoven ascended the platform after one of his improvisations, and kissed him. In the same year, having learned all that Czerny could teach him, he was taken to Paris by his father, who hoped to place him at the Conservatoire. Cherubini, however, obstinately refused to waive the regulation that barred out from that institution all who were of foreign birth. The boy accordingly pursued his general studies under Paër (afterwards under Reicha), and for the pianoforte became his own master. He was at once a success in the social world of Paris. In 1824, 1825, and 1827 he visited England, playing in London, Manchester, and elsewhere. On October 17, 1825, a one-act operetta of his, 'Don Sanche, ou le Château de l'Amour,' was produced at the Académie Royale de Musique, and performed three times afterwards, with moderate success, on October 19, 21, and 26. The score was long believed to have perished in the fire at the Opéra on October 31, 1873, but M. Jean Chantavoine discovered in 1904 that it existed in the handwriting of a copyist, and gave an account of it in one of the numbers of 'Die Musik' for that year.

In 1827 Liszt's father died, and the boy's mother fell to his sole care. He thus grew to manhood without any real control or guidance, in a brilliant society that was full of intellectual and other perils for an artist so sensitive and so delicately-balanced as he. His associates mostly belonged to the Romantic movement of that time; his favourite reading was Chateaubriand's 'René.' Though always alive to the movements around him, Liszt was never a solid thinker on any subject but music. Like Wagner, his enthusiasm and his hopes for social regeneration were greatly in excess of his knowledge and his judgment. For a time he fell a victim to the revolutionary ideas of 1830, and became an adherent of the Saint-Simonians, though he never formally joined the order; at a later date he frankly confessed that his zeal in these and other things was largely the product of his ignorance. He admitted, too, that the brilliant and enticing, but musically uncultivated, society in which he moved betrayed him into many a sin against his artistic conscience; as his hearers could not understand Beethoven or Weber simply as they were, he would alter them or load them with bravura work to win applause. Two influences seem to have gone a good way towards steadying him—Chopin's lofty artistic spirit and exquisitely poetical style of playing, and Paganini's virtuosity, which quickened his insight into the possibilities of the pianoforte and fired him with new ambition. The more serious side of his nature was always at war with the pleasure-loving side; and he more than once, probably in crises of physical weakness, thought of becoming a priest.

All his life long he was frantically run after by women: he, for his part, was always as unhappy without them as with them. The Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein, who knew him thoroughly, once wrote of him: 'His soul is too tender, too artistic, too sensitive, for him to be able to exist without women's society: he must have women in his circle, and, indeed, a number of them; just as in his orchestra he needs many instruments, each with its own rich timbre.' Liszt's feminine orchestra was certainly a large one; and though it is not always possible to be quite sure of his descendants, we know enough to be able to say that he gave the world not only a large quantity of good music but a number of good musicians. But his attachments generally turned out a source of unhappiness to him. It was so with the first that played any considerable part in his life. In 1834 the Countess d'Agoult (whose literary name was Daniel Stern) to all intents and purposes forced him into a union with her that lasted some ten years before the final estrangement and separation came. She bore him three children, one of whom, Cosima (born December 25, 1837), afterwards became successively the wife of Hans von Bülow and of Wagner.

From about 1839 to 1847 Liszt toured Europe many times as a concert pianist, making vast sums, a large proportion of which he gave away in princely fashion to any good cause, public or private. But his triumphs never dazzled or corrupted him. He saw that the majority of the public were interested in him only as a performer, and had no sympathy with or real understanding of the artist. In 1847, at the height of his powers and his popularity, he abandoned the career of concert pianist for ever; his desire now was to devote himself to composition and the diffusion of a new spirit in music. In the execution of this resolve he was encouraged by the Princess Carolyne zu Sayn-Wittgenstein, a Polish lady, unhappy in her marriage, whom he met in Kief in February, 1847. With her he retired to Weimar, where he lived for thirteen years (1848-61), raising the little town to something like the status it had had during the residence there of Goethe and Schiller, composing and teaching a great deal, labouring incessantly and unselfishly for Wagner, Berlioz, and indeed any composer who had something worthy to say, and gradually making himself the centre of what came to be known as the 'New German School.'

As a consequence he drew on himself the enmity of all conservative Germany, more especially of Leipzig, the accredited centre of traditionalism. One of his most notable characteristics was his unflinching eye for genius of any kind. He was invariably right, while his antagonists were generally wrong. At a glance he saw, as early as the forties, that Wagner was a man in a million, the creator of a new dynasty in music,—this at a time when most musicians saw little more in Wagner than a clever Kapellmeister, and Schumann, for example, could call him a mere dilettante. Every idea for which Liszt fought,—a more poetic conception of music, greater freedom of idea and flexibility of form, more elasticity in playing and conducting, and so on—has now won its way into the art and is accepted as the merest matter of course. But in his lifetime the struggle against conservatism was long and severe, and Liszt had the bitterness of seeing many ranged against him whose admirer or benefactor he had been. Joachim's desertion of him, for example, let his apologists gloss it over as they will, seems, in the light of later knowledge, to have been due less to an artistic revulsion than to a calculated attempt to ingratiate himself with the authorities at Berlin. We can see the whole conflict now from the outside, and the honours certainly rest with Liszt. He never let even ingratitude to himself blind him to the merits of other men's work; while he and the school to which he belonged rarely received even mannerly treatment from its opponents. There was a curious touch of priggism about the conservative partisans that is not quite extinct in these days,—a tendency to regard themselves as the sole custodians of the ark of the covenant, and to turn up the white of the eyes and call heaven and man to witness that they are not as these musical sinners are. It was amusingly evident in the preposterous manifesto issued by Brahms, Joachim, Grimm and Scholz in 1860, declaring the aims of the school of the 'Music of the Future' to be 'contrary to the inmost and essential nature of music.' Words and images fall one when one tries to characterize the solemn absurdity of a Grimm and a Scholz lecturing a Wagner and a Liszt upon the permissible limits of music; something like Mrs. Partington and the three tailors of Tooley Street rolled into one can alone express one's idea of it. Did history not testify to it, we should find it hard to-day to believe how seriously some of these good people took themselves, how convinced they were of their own musical virtue, and how they drew their chaste skirts round them at the bare thought of contact with one of the sinners of the new-school. As late as 1878 Frau von Herzogenberg could write to Brahms protesting against Clara Schumann being asked to play at a concert at which Wotan's Abschied was to be sung: 'You must really make Wüllner change the programme. It takes many hounds to kill a hare, but one Feuerzauber would be Frau Schumann's death. It is inconceivable that she should play. There really is a want of delicacy in the arrangement. How can any audience be expected to appreciate really artistic work and a piece like Feuerzauber on one and the same evening? O Wüllner, Wüllner! I always thought you were a gentleman, but this programme betrays the impresario.' Observe the smug belief of this little group that it alone was the salt of the musical earth, that to it alone had the true revelation been vouchsafed.

Clara Schumann, indeed, took leave not only of her good sense but of her manners where Liszt was concerned. In spite of all he had done for Schumann, she refused to play at the Mozart Festival in Vienna in 1856 because Liszt was the conductor, or at the unveiling of the Schumann Gedenktafel at Zwickau, simply because Liszt was present; and when she was editing her husband's works after his death she struck out Schumann's own dedication of the C major Phantasie to Liszt. This prudish horror of Liszt in the Schumann-Brahms circle has persisted to the present day. Mr. Fuller Maitland, for example, in his recent biography of Brahms,—an excellent book in spite of its author's occasionally too obvious prepossessions—thinks it 'hardly probable that any degree of personal or artistic intimacy could ever have endured between men whose constitutional modesty made them hate all that was tawdry, and those to whom the adulation of a large public was as the breath of their nostrils, and who cared little for the real merits of their music so long as it was likely to surprise or tickle the ears of their audiences.' Well, I do not think that the constitutional modesty of Schumann, Brahms, Grimm, Joachim, and the others, would ever have made them object to an audience twice as large as any they drew during their lifetime; and as for Liszt, everyone knows that he, who had the adulation not merely of a large but of an enormous audience for nearly twenty years, voluntarily renounced in his thirty-sixth year applause and money and the intoxication of being the first virtuoso in the world in order to take stock of his own soul and give the best in him time and space to grow. And as for him 'caring little for the real merits of his music as long as it was likely to surprise or tickle the ears of his audiences,' whether you like Liszt's Symphonic Poems or not the accusation is wildly untrue of them,—and it is against the Symphonic Poems, as Mr. Maitland admits, that the manifesto was directed. Mr. Maitland's language throughout is a relic of the partisan warfare of the sixties. 'The classicists feel responsible for the handing down of a great tradition in its purity'; the new school are merely 'ready enough to pose as martyrs for truths that have been revealed to them alone.' Once more, whether you like Liszt's greater works or not—his 'Dante' and 'Faust' Symphonies, his Symphonic Poems, his 'Christus,' his 'Saint Elisabeth,' his Masses and his other Church music,—no unprejudiced person can deny that he was completely sincere in them. History has justified him. With his own strong leanings towards one kind of art, he was never blind to the merits of the music of other men of all orders of imagination: it was they who were blind to his merits,—and, as a rule, to those of each other, as composers are apt to be.

These echoes of the old contest, its charges and counter-charges, will give some idea of its virulence at that time. Liszt did wonders during his thirteen years at Weimar, but not all he had wished; the parsimony of the Grand Duke was a constant hindrance to the development of the theatre.

Liszt left the town in 1861. His disillusionment had been brought to a climax, at the end of 1858, by a cabal against Cornelius's 'Barber of Bagdad,' which he rightly believed to be directed in part against himself.

He settled for a time in Rome, where he later on took minor orders in the Catholic priesthood. His inner life had long been a tragedy. For years he had tried in vain to get the permission of the Church to marry the Princess Carolyne; when at length her husband died, and the real obstacle to their union had vanished, the desire of each of them for marriage had passed away, though they remained the closest friends and companions almost to the end. Liszt's sojourn in Rome lasted till 1869. As in his earlier years he had written almost exclusively for the pianoforte, and during the Weimar period had devoted himself mainly to the symphonic poem, in Rome he set himself to the reform, by precept and example, of Catholic church music. In this, however, he did not receive the expected help from the Church authorities. From 1869 to his death in 1886 he led a wandering life between Rome, Weimar, and Pesth, teaching, conducting, and performing his own works. In the autumn of 1867, following upon Cosima's desertion of Von Bülow and flight to Wagner, there came an estrangement between Liszt and the latter that persisted until the time of the laying of the foundation stone of the Bayreuth theatre in 1872. No intimation even of the marriage of Wagner and Cosima in 1870 was sent him; Liszt first heard of it from the newspapers. In November, 1871, an attempt on his life was made in Pesth by the Countess Janina, a pupil whose head had been turned by unrequited, or imperfectly requited, passion. In 1883 came the greatest shock of his later years—the death of Wagner. Cosima, whose conduct towards him was strangely imperious and chilling to the end, asked him not to come to Bayreuth after the death, and did not once receive him during all the weeks he spent in the town in the summer of 1884. His last months were brightened by a visit to England (in April, 1886) for a performance of his 'St. Elisabeth.' He was the guest of Mr. Henry Littleton, and all London united to do him honour. During the course of his wanderings over Europe in the following weeks he developed a severe cold that turned to inflammation of the lungs, to which he succumbed at Bayreuth on July 31, 1886. He was buried in the cemetery there on August 3.

Men of all schools have joined in admiration of the nobility and generosity of his character. Many of those whom he so warmly befriended rewarded him only with ingratitude, but no baseness of this kind could check or pollute the fountain of his humanity. One anecdote may be told as typical of many. In his latter years he used to miss money from his desk. Many people were suspected, but the mystery remained unsolved till one day Liszt's servant caught the thief in the very act of opening the desk with a duplicate key. He was one of the master's oldest friends. Liszt entered the room as the servant was holding the man. He took in the meaning of the situation at a glance, and his first concern was to shield his friend. He ordered the servant to release him, saying that he himself had given Herr X. the key to get something for him out of the desk. His grief at the deception was profound, and of course he broke off all relations with the man; but whenever he met him in society afterwards he was careful to preserve externally the same attitude towards him as of old.

III.

Liszt's casual upbringing was not the best that could be imagined for a composer. It is customary to lay stress upon his lack of formal education in his boyhood. The value of seminaries is always exaggerated by those who, as someone has remarked, are apt to mistake their university for the universe. Genius of the imaginative order is as likely to be hampered as to be helped by the sort of education and the sort of teacher one gets in the average university or high school; it was not this kind of thing that made Shakespeare and Michel Angelo and Bach and Beethoven and Wagner what they were. Liszt probably missed nothing essential by having got his experience of life at first hand instead of through text-books or schoolmasters. What certainly did him some harm was the peculiar quality of the environment in which he was placed at an age when he could not estimate it at its true value. For an older man, with his character formed, and able to assimilate what there was of good in each culture with which he came into contact, Liszt's early life would have been an ideal one. The son of a Hungarian father and an Austrian mother, brought up in France, and nourished on German and Italian music,—out of this crossing of cultures one might have expected something unique. But Liszt's plastic temperament and the early age at which he was subjected to all kinds of distracting influences conspired to retard for many years the development of his true personality.

It is not the fact, as used to be often said, that the idea of taking to composition only occurred to him comparatively late in life; but it is true that his social amusements and his pianoforte-playing absorbed for some years a large proportion of the energy that ought to have gone to the development of his inventive faculty and of his technique. It was not schooling that he lacked, but time to work and to think. A musical technique is not made by precept but by practice. You can learn all that can really be taught in six months, as Wagner did; after that the hand of the worker must be subdued to what it works in by constant immersion in it. The composer's technique is fundamentally of the same kind as that of the pianist or the violinist. It will not put a particle more inspiration into the brain than the grey matter there has been capable of from birth; its real function is, strictly speaking, a negative one—to make sure that no barrier intervenes between an idea and the expression of it. Not until the technique becomes, as it did with Bach, so purely natural a thing that it is even absurd to call it by so artificial a term as technique,—a functioning of the faculty of musical conception as easy, spontaneous, and unconscious as the circulation of the blood or the secretions of the glands—not until then is the imagination perfectly free to go whither it will. To work with a conscious application of technique is to be like a bird that should be unable to fly without having studied the mechanism of flight, and consciously putting it into operation at each wing-beat. But a technique of this supreme kind is only attained by practice, the necessary length of which of course varies with the primary aptitude of the composer; arterial tracks of thought are in time furrowed through the brain, till in the end a composer thinks as easily in terms of musical combinations as the rest of us do in words, and a Bach, a Strauss, or a Reger has no more need to build up his counterpoint brick by brick than he has to move his eyelids by a separate effort of the volition; in the one case as in the other the factors succeed or fit into each other so swiftly and unconsciously as to baffle analysis. It was this kind of training that Liszt lacked. He wasted his early years in perfecting a technique—that of the pianoforte—that was of no use to him as a composer, and in juggling with other men's ideas instead of developing and purging his own faculty of conception. So it came about that even in his greatest works his technique is occasionally amateurish, in the sense that after a really good idea a moment of comparative helplessness ensues in which he is visibly taking breath and asking himself what he shall do next. He can think well and pertinently enough, but he cannot, as a rule, think swiftly. One feels with him, as with Joachim, that he would have been a greater composer had not nature, in an excess of kindness, made him so great a virtuoso.

A study of his songs, which are all comparatively early works, will show quite clearly the extreme difficulty he had in giving concision to his ideas. He can rarely touch a lyric of any emotional pregnancy without turning it into a small ode. He sees it too much in detail to be able,—as Wolf, for example, would do,—to give his music the appearance of all being conceived in a single white-hot moment and poured forth in one white-hot spurt of speech. Liszt's music, even at its best, moves somewhat slowly, and with a slight creak of the machinery; rarely does it seem, to use one of von Bülow's favourite images for good art, as if it were shot out of a cannon. Least of all is he a lyrist, in spite of the fine quality of many of his songs as a whole and of almost all of them in parts. The charm and value of the lyric,—its swift compression, its sudden bird-like swoop into our field of vision and out of it again, its power to bring all the immensities of human experience flocking round the heart at the bidding of a single word—of all this there remains no trace after the poem has passed through Liszt's hands. Examine, for instance, one of the best-known of his songs,—the 'Loreley.' It is undeniably beautiful; parts of it, especially the lovely  $\frac{9}{8}$  melody, can pass successfully the supreme test of song-writing,— the expression is felt to be so primal an emanation from the very soul of the words that henceforth we cannot think of the one without the other. But the whole song unquestionably drags. It takes too long; it repeats itself too often; it develops details, such as that of the painting of the wreck of the boat, until we lose hold of what should be the central emotion of the poem, the mysterious seductiveness of the siren herself. And, like so many of Liszt's songs, it is an unconscionable time in dying. Heine's simple and impressive with its cunning trust in the power of the imagination to multiply the meaning of the simple words a hundredfold, is not enough for Liszt. He spreads the lines out in this fashion: 'Und das hat mit ihrem Singen die Loreley, die Loreley gethan; und das hat mit ihrem Singen, die Loreley, die Loreley gethan, die Loreley gethan; und das hat mit ihrem Singen die Loreley, die Loreley gethan, die Loreley gethan,' until, for all the intrinsic beauty of the themes, something of the native force has gone out of them through sheer repetition.

Or look again at 'Wer nie sein Brod mit Thränen ass' (the first setting, in E minor), and you will see how much of the effect of that splendid conception is dissipated by its too elaborate insistence on certain words, and by its tendency to turn the lyric into a dramatic scena. In 'Ueber allen Gipfeln ist Ruh' the emotional tempo of Goethe's wonderful little lyric:

Ueber allen Gipfeln
Ist Ruh';
In allen Wipfeln
Spürest du Kaum einen Hauch;
Die Vöglein schweigen im Walde.
Warte nur, balde

is slowed down to such an extent at the finish that all the magic seems squeezed out of the poem; yet the more we examine the song in detail the more expressive do the details seem. The trouble comes simply from Liszt's inability to stop at the critical moment, which perhaps in its turn comes from a lack of power to invent themes whose emotional force is in proportion to their compression. In 'Anfangs wollt' ich fast verzagen,' for example, Hugo Wolf would have ended with the first 'aber frag mich nur nicht wie'; only he would have set it to such a phrase that you would have felt that nothing more needed to or could be said after it. Liszt's besetting sin is a proneness to elephantiasis. Even so good a song as 'Die todte Nachtigall' is spoiled by excess of protestation: Liszt digs a grave for the poor little bird big enough for a turkey.

This absence of rapidity and sureness of stroke, that does so much to weaken some of his finest conceptions, was clearly the result of his inability to concentrate upon composition pure and simple during the years of his growth to mental maturity. This deprivation had other results. A composer, like any other growing organism, has to get rid slowly of a number of youthful disabilities,—above all, a tendency to drop into a cumbious kind of emotional over-effort. Here also the fault comes from lack of experience and practice; the insufficiently used limbs cannot take aim without overshooting the mark, the unversed brain cannot say what it wants to say without saying rather more than it meant. In Liszt the tendency to overstatement was increased by his immersion, in early years, in the facile, meaningless formulas of the old French and Italian schools. He found it hard to keep clear of these, even in his finest works. What other man, for instance, having invented so good a theme as that in 'Les Préludes' (A), would hang on to it so banal an appendage as Liszt does at B:

or end thus a phrase in which he expresses his longing for death:

or deface a song like 'Kennst du das Land' with such a cadence as this:

Yet the songs, early works as they are for the most part, and full as they are of Liszt's typical failings,—excess of statement, a too anxious and too obvious search for drastic expression, inability to achieve a rapid and concentrated flight,—are an epitome not only of the whole Liszt but of the entire movement towards freedom that has alternately tempted and decoyed and racked and delighted the music of the last two or three generations. Like Wagner, Liszt saw that the only possible line for music to take, if it was to find new means of expression and to open out new fields of psychology, was to allow itself to be 'fertilised by poetry.' He is even less of an 'abstract' musician than Wagner; he probably never wrote any serious work—apart, perhaps, from the merely technical Etudes—that was not stimulated by a poem or a picture or some similar impression from without. Hence the difficulties he experienced in moulding a concise and consistent form for himself. The classicists have always a long start in this race. Their form is ready made for them; they have only to fill it, altering it or expanding it here and there; they are spared the labour of thrashing out a new form for themselves. They are strong not only in their own strength, but in the strength of every one of their mighty forerunners. They partly exist, to use a homely simile, on pre-digested food. The heaviest burden always falls on the composer who has not only new things to say, but has to manufacture for himself the new forms and symbols through which alone he can find full utterance. Hence the frequent sense of fumbling and stumbling that the true pioneers always give us. The astonishing thing is not that there are occasional crudities and weaknesses in Liszt's work, but that there are not more of them. Many things that his contemporaries regarded as crudities no longer, of course, strike us in the same way. Naturally the new and more personal kind of emotion that it was the work of Wagner and Liszt to bring into music needed new harmonic combinations. The conservative ears and eyes of 1850 may have been shocked at such a passage as this (from the song 'Vergiftet sind meine Lieder'):

but it has no terrors for us of to-day. The trouble with Liszt's harmony was not that it was ugly, but that it was often new. To an age that placed formal consonance and symmetry before truth of characterization it often of necessity sounded wilfully harsh and meaningless; but a later generation, used to drastic tone-painting, can see that it is justified by the poetic situation that gave it birth.

In other fields also Liszt was in search of new modes of expression that would be adequate to the new types of feeling. He was the first, I think, to make extended use of the single rhetorical melodic line,—a cross between melody and the old recitative. Some mode of expression of this kind is a necessity to modern music, which has to employ a kind of declamatory, rhythmical prose in certain situations that do not fitly find voice in the more suave and symmetrical lyric forms. The germ of the method is perhaps to be found in the Scherzo of Beethoven's ninth Symphony, in that curious experimental passage where he seems to be passing all kinds of suggestions under review and rejecting them one by one. This phrase, for example:

might have come direct out of a work of Liszt. But the form of expression that Beethoven merely seemed to stumble upon is deliberately sought out and used by Liszt a hundred times. He sees that it is the only possible mode of expression for certain ideas. But the force of its eloquence obviously depends upon our being able to go to meet it half way. Purely melodic and harmonic music is certain of a response to its simple appeal; the truth of the declamatory melodic line is only apparent when we know what it is that is being declaimed; and when this is not clear, as is often inevitable in purely instrumental music, the majority of hearers are bound to be somewhat irresponsible to it. It is really an attempt to get the force and point and telling accentuation of speech and gesture in a non-verbal musical phrase. At the same time, still pursuing his poetic ideal, Liszt tries to mould the forms of musical utterance closer and closer to the natural verbal expression of the idea, to track the very modulations of the speaking voice under strong feeling, or even the primal cry of emotion before it has found words to solidify and systematise it. In the expression of grief, for instance, he will often give the voice a chromatic descent that is as near as definite music can come to the indefinite wail, as in the following passage from the oratorio 'Christus':

This is not wholly successful; but the principle is legitimate enough, as may be seen when a fully equipped master puts it in practice in the way that Hugo Wolf does in his beautiful song, 'Tief im Herzen trag' ich Pein,' that does perfectly and once for all what Liszt so often vainly tried to do. But if Liszt in this, as in other points of expression, could not always realise his own vision, at the least the credit is his for having had the vision first, and for having shown modern music the path to some of the most poignant of its utterances.

Finally, in these early songs we can see Liszt aiming at that new principle of unity that obsessed him all his life. In a little song like 'Es war ein König in Thule' is contained the germ of the whole of the later system of developing a long piece of music out of one characteristic theme, that becomes transformed in shape and colour and texture according to each new phase of the story it has to suggest. The song is a masterpiece in many ways, but most of all in its splendid coherence and in its achievement of a concision that Liszt too rarely attained. In 'Ich möchte hingehn,' again, an admirable sense of form is shown in the rounding off of the final section, which is of the nature of an answer, by references to the themes of the questioning or aspiring verses that precede it. Here, too, he was laying foundations upon which probably the greatest part of modern music has been built.

A DESIRABLE REFORM IN MUSICAL ÆSTHETICS.

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Compared with that of any other branch of æsthetics, the actual state of musical æsthetics is most unsatisfactory: there is no other province in the domain of the philosophy of art in which so great and apparently so hopeless a confusion prevails.

Let us imagine a would-be student surrounded by treatises, handbooks, essays, on the æsthetics of music. As soon as he has perused them, or simply read their tables of contents, he will be bewildered to find that hardly two of them have anything in common; he will see nothing but a medley of different or even contradictory starting-points, plans, statements, arguments, and so-called rules or laws—to say nothing of the application of these rules and laws.

Some authors, for instance, adopt for starting-point a dogmatic definition or axiom: 'Music is . . .', 'The object of music is to . . .', and thenceforth view all works of art at a more or less invariable angle, approving or disapproving each according to the degree of correspondence that they find between it and their postulate.

Others, equally prejudiced although their method seems preferable, study a number of acknowledged masterpieces and thence deduce what they would have us believe to be the universal and perennial laws of musical beauty.

A widespread theory, propounded for the first time as a starting-point for æsthetics by Herder, is that music derives from speech or from gesture. Apart from the fact that this theory is extremely questionable, and in fact superseded, one may remark that even if it were in the main correct, it would not afford sufficiently unequivocal a ground, as is shown by the divergences of the writers that have adopted it—among whom Herbert Spencer, Hugo Riemann, and Dr. Ingegnieros may be quoted as exemplifying how extremely opposite results are reached from this starting-point.

Other systems are founded on purely formalistic conceptions, presenting music either as an abstract and mathematical, or as a merely decorative art. Again, musical beauty is considered as a particular form of ideal and universal Beauty—which leads straight into the realm of metaphysics. Dr. Hugo Riemann, in his 'Elements of musical æsthetics,' studies separately each element of music: intonation, quality, harmony, tone, rhythm, motives, construction, thus leading up to dithyrambs in favour of pure, abstract music. One also meets with various utilitarian systems, according to which the function of music is of a moral or sociologic order, its æsthetics being only a particular application of general sociologic laws; with perfectly unintelligible systems, like that of M. Jules Combarieu, who has invented what he calls 'an intellectual specialisation of musical elements'—to say nothing of many minor systems, of books labelled treatises of musical æsthetics, but whose authors content themselves with empirically describing the evolution of forms, style and taste, or specifying what they believe to be the characteristics of symphonic or dramatic, pure or programme, harmonic or contrapuntal music. Lastly come the theory of personal taste and the practical musician's blissful ignorance, accounted for in the terse formula, 'music is music'—an excellent one in its way, but helping only musicians, who are happy enough not to need the enlightenment that investigators seek.

The reason of this striking discrepancy is summed up in one remark from John Stuart Mill's Autobiography, that 'of all arts, music is the most remote from positive reality.'

Music, in fact, seems to be the only art unconnected with nature, and having no acknowledged concrete starting-point or model. It offers no faithful image of the physical nor of the spiritual world; and whilst all other arts were known to be founded on a more or less accurate copy of some object, it alone remained in the bondage of subjectivity.

This was enough to baffle the most earnest inquirers. And it is self-evident that as long as such a state of things prevails, one can hope for no real progress. The temptation is great to conclude that, since one can find no physical basis to music, one must turn to metaphysics: and in their inborn fondness for metaphysics the German theorists, who have long laid down the law in matters of musical science, have amply improved the occasion. Their tendency culminates in Dr. Riemann's assertion that 'music borrows its data from a world far distant from that from which the other arts borrow theirs.'

Can we definitely accept so anomalous and unsatisfactory a state of things, and remain content with admitting music to be fundamentally different from all other arts, to be an art on the subject of which all abstruse, contradictory, unfounded statements are to remain uncontroversial? On the contrary, it appears to me that even if we had not the slightest inkling where to seek for a sound guiding principle, we should still feel that principle to be necessary; and we should still surmise that it exists and will be found: that music, like all arts, must be connected with some elementary natural data. And, since all arts elaborate something, the question is, What does music elaborate? As long as we do not find the answer we are helpless, and have to bear with the dogmas of abstract theorists.

Fortunately, psycho-physiology has of late entered the field, and mere physical facts, experimentally discovered and leading not to assumptions, but to truth, begin to annihilate speculative theories.

It has long ago become evident that the physical side of the problem is not to be neglected. For instance, in his fine book, 'L'imagination créatrice,' the French philosopher, Ribot, expressly remarks that 'Music, the most emotional of arts, is the most dependent on physiologic conditions; experiments on animals or on human beings proving that the sensations of sound and movement act directly on the organism, and produce a physical state of pleasure or pain.' Another author, Bray, in his book, 'Du Beau,' adds that 'Music creates an intellectual disposition depending on organic conditions and on nervous activity, which form a canvas on which the intellect embroiders.'

Therefore, one is hardly surprised to find that psycho-physiology has already reached important results, although it has but recently begun to comprise the study of matters appertaining to musical art. The happy chance that many cases of nervous or mental diseases afforded valuable clues which it would have been impossible to overlook, prompted several specialists to enter on a course of observations and experiments which it now remains to sift and to probe.

The most cursory examination of the writings of men like Wallaschek, Ingegnieros, Marcel Nathan, Dupré, Vaschide, Lahy, will convince all students of aesthetics that the true path is at last found.

Dr. Ingegnieros's book, 'Le langage musical et ses troubles hystériques' (1907), seems to me the most important on account of the facts it adduces—although the author, an eminent alienist, and professor at the University of Buenos-Ayres, knows very little of music, and goes astray as soon as he relinquishes pure psycho-physiology. 'Music,' says Dr. Ingegnieros, 'results from the inflections produced by sentiments and emotions on the human voice.' This is the Spencerian starting-point, but the following sentence does away with risks of error: 'The elements distinguishing song from speech belong to the natural language of emotion. . . . Musical excitations cause the physical reactions by which all emotions are characterized, and none of these reactions is particular to musical emotion: all emotions have these reactions in common.'

This demonstrated fact is welcome to any one not liking the idea that music borrows its data from a special and far-away sphere. And it is quite a relief to be shown that 'musical language consists of all the sounds used by man to express his emotions, is similar to speech, and has a similar mechanism.' When, turning to 'Le langage musical,' by Drs. Dupré and Nathan, we learn that 'sounds produce similar reactions in similar beings, and thus gradually acquire invariable meanings, whilst man gradually tends to reproduce the sounds that have become symbols of emotional states,' we feel that we have sense at last, and not mere fabrications. The same method of experimental investigation, accounting as it does for complex series of sounds and for rhythm as well as for quality, affords an absolute proof that musical language arises from mere somatic states, and has its model in the functional modification of the human organism. Of course, these may be the results as well as the causes of emotions, so that the new theory need not affect the votaries of metaphysic system. But in either case we have found an answer. We are no longer incapable of gainsaying statements like Leibnitz's, that 'music is the arithmetic of a soul vainly trying to number itself,' or Dr. Riemann's or Herder's that 'the sonorous movements are images of the movements of the soul.' They may be that, but it is enough that they are images of the movements of the organism, which in turn may be images of the movements of the soul, without this parallelism impairing the value of the matter-of-fact scientific method reached.

So materialistic a way of putting things will perhaps be found incompatible with the unparagoned dignity of musical art. But why should this be the case? A physiologic phenomenon is no nearer to a piece of music than the refraction or the reflection of light to a beautiful picture. Yet we cannot ignore the fact that the basis of Rembrandt's, Turner's, or Monet's most enchanting paintings is none other than this commonplace physical fact. We do not account for the beauty of such masterpieces by referring to the science of optics; nor do I pretend to argue that we should account for the beauties of Bach or Beethoven by referring to sphygmograms or to reflex actions.

There is just as much of soul in music as there is in the other arts, all of which have a concrete basis of some sort; and this should be enough. What we want, and what psycho-physiology supplies, is the proof that the fundament of music is not metaphysical, and that we should not reason of music as of something occult and obscure.

One example will show the practical advantages of a sound starting-point. Among the variances to be observed between writers on music, none is more striking than the one arising from the question of pure versus programme music.

That the detractors of programme music do not acknowledge their antipathy to be a mere matter of taste is apparent in Dr. Riemann's assertions that there is no connection between sentiment and sensation—which is in fact precisely the reverse of what science proves—and that therefore pure abstract music is the highest and best because it appeals to us without using means meretriciously borrowed from other arts: 'Music should represent nothing except what is in itself and through itself.' Very little remains of such axioms after psycho-physiology has proved that music need borrow no such means from other arts, because music in itself and through itself is endowed with the necessary capacities for all its effects. And if abstract music is to be declared best, other reasons than Dr. Riemann's will have to be found.

The sifting and probing of the data supplied by psycho-physiology devolves on the æsthetician proper. And this difficult task can be performed only by an expert in music and in philosophy who shall at the same time be an expert in science. This, being an ideal combination, is likely to remain uncommon, and one can hardly expect rapid progress. But the first results are encouraging enough to show that the formidable labour of culling, investigating, and interpreting the facts brought to light by science—a labour that necessitates a preliminary training of a rather special sort—will not remain fruitless. And a judicious co-operation of musical science and psychology can but result in endowing us at last, not with a system, but with a sound, simple, and intelligible method of musical æsthetics.

THE NEW 'WAGNER-LISZT.'

By WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS.

(Concluded from September No., p. 581.)

III.

Speaking of a quality he first had occasion to observe at close quarters during Liszt's prolonged visit to Zurich in the autumn of 1856, namely, a certain 'Gereiztheit'—or touchiness—Wagner remarks in 'Mein Leben' (p. 641): 'It never came to a pitched battle between us, but for the rest of my life [—written at least a dozen years before its end]—I was left with the presentiment that it might come to such a thing some day, and then it would be terrible; and perhaps it was this very feeling that held me back from any chance explosion, though I otherwise was well enough known among my friends for my inflammability.'

It is to the 'Correspondence,' however, that we must go for two leading instances on which 'Mein Leben' preserves a magnanimous silence. The first had occurred about two years before that visit; the second, and severer, came just two years after it. To the first of these instances, viz., Liszt's pique at the ultimate yielding of 'Tannhäuser' to the Prussian Court-theatre without his personal direction, I devoted a chapter in vol. iv.,

'Life of Wagner' (1904), headed: 'A Berlin-Weimar complication,' at whose end I ventured to suggest that: 'In the relations between Wagner and Liszt the tendency has mostly been to magnify the disposition of the latter at the expense of the former, and more particularly to praise his "superior tact." Their characters were entirely different; so much so, that there must have been a large fund of loveliness in both, for them to have journeyed at all well together; but this episode has proved that, when variance arose between them, it is not necessarily Wagner that must bear the blame,' and so on. And now our new edition of the 'Correspondence' clears Wagner from the last shadow of reproach in the matter of that 'capitulation' through its restoring to us a passage heretofore suppressed for other reasons. His London letter of mid-March, 1855 (undated and mis-ranged No. 180 in the older editions) commences thus: 'DEAREST FRANZ, I am in the awkward position of having to ask you for a friendly service of a singular kind. I cannot let this Berlin Tannhäuser affair be delayed any longer; my pecuniary situation is of too irksome a nature for me to keep the chance of Berlin takings closed to me.' Formerly the text, as published, ran straight on into 'Hülßen has applied to me once more,' &c.; but just see what had been omitted! The most complete self-exoneration imaginable:

You know I was only saved from the [financial] catastrophe of last year by a Zurich friend [O. Wesendonck], who paid my debts, but on the condition—proposed by myself—that until this loan's repayment I should place my future takings under his control, in such a mode that I should merely draw—through him—a certain fixed sum for my household requirements. This man is a merchant—friendly and heartily addicted to me—but still—a merchant. With the seeming utter hopelessness of your being called to Berlin, he cannot conceive why we don't give in at last; and since, judging by the precedent of every other place, he expects to get fine receipts from there—in virtue of the tantième,—I no longer feel in the position to hold out against his molestations on this point.

There you have the remainderless solution of that vexed 'capitulation' problem, and at the same time a key to the constant allusions to 'business' in the London letters to Herr Otto himself, e.g.: 'People have a deal of trouble with me; but this much is certain,—money-making is not my business in the world, but creating . . . . Now you, dearest friend, have placed yourself between us two ["the world and me"] with the most excellent intention, assuredly to deaden the shock: take care you do not also feel a little of it.' For, to tell the transparent truth, it was Otto Wesendonck who had constrained Wagner to accept London as well, and actually recovered £80 of his advance by that means (see 'Minna' vols.).

Unfortunately it was a fee question again, coupled with Liszt's misconception thereof, that led to the terrible game of cross-purposes in winter 1858-59; and equally unfortunately, it was Liszt's 'Gereiztheit' that, blinding him to the very obvious application of a hasty remark of Wagner's, nearly brought about an irremediable rupture,—as we now are to see.

Possibly it may be remembered that in vol. vi. 'Life of W.'—in a footnote to p. 394, to be exact—I referred to 'an unpublished answer of Liszt's to Wagner's telegram of New Year's Eve [Dec. 31, '58] and a letter of the same evening, both of them also unpublished and apparently destroyed,' adding that 'In the circumstances it is hopeless to attempt to get at the right or wrong of this rather serious misunderstanding,' &c. It no longer is hopeless, for the telegram alone of those three important documents has disappeared; the other two are now presented to us in this new edition of the 'Correspondence.'

To set the situation properly en scène, it will be needful to remind the reader that, at his wits' end for money in his Venice retreat, Wagner had been endeavouring to get his only then-uncirculating opera, 'Rienzi,' mounted at Weimar, among other places, and to receive a decent honorarium for it. The new Weimar Intendant behaved in a shelving way to both friends, and Liszt in his letter of Dec. 26, '58, jumped at the chance a two-edged previous message of Wagner's had offered of breaking off negotiations with his personally-obnoxious chief; but—and here starts the trouble—that Dec. 26 letter of Liszt's had opened with rapturous thanks for the proofs just received of Act I. of the 'Tristan' full score. Now enters Wagner's 'new' letter, dated 'Sylvester evening 1859,' i.e., Dec. 31, '58, and despatched after that unpreserved telegram of the same day:

O DEAREST, DEAREST FRANZ!—You answer me far too pathetically! Let me give you quite a humoristic-realistic commentary upon my latest letter. What's Dingselstedt to me, what the Grand Duke, or Rienzi?—All tomfoolery.—It's money I require. If that wretched Night-watchman had only sent his measly 25 l.d's at once, at any rate, I should not have minded so much; but to add that 'after the first performance'—(the nincompoop!). You speak about me to these people much too gingerly. Tell them: Wagner doesn't care a rap for any of you, your theatres or his own operas; he's in want of cash, that's all! Didn't even you understand me, then? Didn't I tell you quite plainly and pointedly that I'm trying to scrape money together at all costs? Didn't I beg you to advocate my operas (Lohengrin or flieg. Holl.) at Coburg, &c.? For Heaven's sake, what am I to make of Diana de Solange? Am I to undergo such manifest derision by you?—Not a word! Not a sou!

Well, well! I haven't 10 gulden left now, can't pay my rent, can send nothing to my wife, who wrote me a fortnight back that she had run very short.—All this is transient, however. Next Easter, and if my Tristan is finished, I shall have more than I require. Only, everyone is leaving me stranded at present. Everyone, everyone! From nowhere can I look for a definite return.—And to receive—Diana de Solanges! It's enough to drive one crazy! I see you've no acquaintance with want—happy man!

Or does one reproach me with not living more shabbily? My Franz, when you come to see the second act of Tristan, you'll agree that I require a lot of money. I'm a great spendthrift; but indeed I get something to show for it.—You know that. I ask you to remember it. And never believe I take quarrels with Dingselstedt, Duke, or whoever it be, in real earnest. All I want of the world is mere money; I've everything else. For that paroxysm of conceit you're answerable yourself, through your rejoicing over the first act of Tristan; when you come to know the second, you'll forgive me also if my cry to-day is nothing else but 'Money, money!'—never mind how or from where. My Tristan will pay it all back!—If I go quite crazy, I shall telegraph to you still with my last napoleon!

Adieu! Happy New Year!

Send Dante and Mass [Liszt's 'Graner']. But above all—money! Honorarium for—Lord knows what! Tell Dingselstedt he's every inch an ass; and the Grand Duke, his snuff-box is pawned—strict truth! He should be got to redeem it.—But don't you ever write me seriously or pathetically without. My word, didn't I say the other day you all were bores? Has it borne no fruit at all, then?

Improvement for the New Year! That'll be a fine tale! Oh, oh!

Good-night!

Thy R. W.

This piece of what Germans call 'gallows-humour' was followed two days later by the long explanatory letter, already known to us, of Jan. 2, '59. Too late, however: before the second could reach him, Liszt had answered the first, and in such a wrong-headed fashion that, with that answer's tardy revelation to us in this new edition, we can fully endorse Wagner's allusion in his of the 7th to 'the unparalleled lines you have found it possible to send me.' For here, at last, are those lines of his bosom-friend's:

Not to be exposed any more to the danger of boring you with 'pathetic, serious' phrases, I am returning the first act of Tristan to Härtel, and shall crave permission not to make acquaintance with the others until after their public issue.

As my Dante-symphony and Mass cannot count as bank-stock, it will be superfluous to send them to Venice. I also regard it as no less superfluous, for the future, to receive these telegraphic cries for help and wounding letters.

In serious most loyal attachment to thee abides

F. LISZT.

4th January, 1859.

The ice-cold sting of it! No, surely this was not Liszt's unaided composition; a long-nursed Carolynian grudge peeps out. But, for heaven's sake—if he really was so dense as not to seize the 'gallows-humour' of that New Year's Eve epistle—why did Liszt not telegraph the moment he received its successor, and implore his friend to return the above unopened? It is his not having done so, even more than the truly 'unparalleled lines' themselves—which one might otherwise attribute to a passing huff,—that made this incident of such paralytic effect in the long run. That lost opportunity could never recur, and from the beginning of 1859, accordingly, dates a change in this historic friendship which, in spite of temporary patchings up, was gradually to superinduce a virtual suspension of correspondence between the late summer of 1861 and the spring of 1872. And here again one may justly acquit Wagner of blame; for not only did he treat those freezing lines with the greatest indulgence in his answer of Jan. 7, '59—as may be seen in the earlier editions,—but the very next day he wrote again to soften even that, as now at last disclosed to us:

Venice, 8. January 59.

MY FRANZ,—I shouldn't like to have made fresh concessions to the demon of Misunderstanding. In my own case I have just experienced how terribly easy, in a sudden state of inward agitation, is a misunderstanding quite unthinkable otherwise and after calm reflection. At such moments the demon simply lies in wait to cast the blackest veil of fancy o'er our minds. For, after quietly reading your lines through once more, I recognise that the passage: 'As my Dante symphony and Mass cannot count as bank-stock,

* A new opera by that 'sourgrapes' reigning Duke of Coburg, whose dedication thereof to Wagner 'in somewhat disconcerting company with Meyerbeer' had been foreshadowed in a postscript to Liszt's letter of Dec. 26.—[W. A. E.]

it will be superfluous to send them to Venice,' was at first misunderstood by me as if you intended to say: 'Since I have something different in mind with my works than mere money-making,* as you loudly aver of your own, but am only concerned for a friend's recognition and sympathy—which you deride,—I will spare you them.' It was this erroneous interpretation that betrayed me into the only snappish retort in my letter of yesterday, a retort I heartily regret to-day. †

I now see you merely meant to say to me: 'As you declare your whole concern on every side is only money, nothing else whatever, and have told me this just after my expressing my sympathy for the first act of Tristan, I cannot believe that my own works, which are anything but money, will interest you.'

Your thus placing yourself in one category with that Theatre world and all that bears thereon, was just your strange mistake. That in my present commerce with that world, however, I only keep my eye on profits—upon what is to put me in a position to continue working undeterred by any hap, and simply concerned to gain the sympathy of those nearest my heart, perhaps yours alone,—for this I surely can be blamed the least by one who is equally convinced with myself of the mindlessness and mutilating mania of those 'art'-institutes and the great evil bulk of their doings. Yet, that I, too, would gladly be relieved of this last interest in our theatrical mart, and dispensed from such necessities as that which once compelled me unconditionally, and without fulfilment of my craving to entrust the first performance to you, to surrender my Tannhäuser to Berlin (the results whereof, it being precisely the altogether mindless and revolting Berlin performances that have brought me in most money, finally led to that ironically desperate attitude of mine towards all kindred questions),—that I would fain be redeemed from this sole and sad connection left me with the traffic of our Stage, the humiliating immorality of which I feel quite painfully enough, I've already told you on the 2nd of this January.

But enough. Our friendship is suffering from a serious lack of personal intercourse; so let us hope to see that lack materially redressed from this year on. I know that cloudings of this latest kind will then become impossible. To remove all shadow of the chance of such a one, however, I once more beg you most insistently not to pay further heed to my letter of the 2nd January, and not to answer it. Any letter from yourself which, judging by the date of its arrival, I should have to regard as an answer to that, I shall not open: to be able to consider it—together with my own—as never written. I feel that in the contents of that letter the point might easily be touched whereon I still am very sensitive, since it concerns myself, my qualities, and—therefore—idiosyncrasies inbred in me which cannot well be changed now.

At this point in the new letter of Jan. 8 we reach what the older editions had converted into a postscript to No. 282 (letter of Jan. 7), and therefore may be left to supplement. But more strongly than ever, am I now convinced that Wagner's brief undated lines, 'Dearest Franz,—Have you nothing whatever to say to me, then? Whence am I to draw any comfort, if everyone ignores me?—Venice, Thy R.'—ranged immediately after the letter of Jan. 2 even in this new edition (No. 280 in the older)—must have been written when he had long waited in vain for an answer from Liszt to his letters of Jan. 7 and 8. For Liszt—and assuredly that was not very noble of him—sent no reply until the 17th of the following month (No. 283 in the older editions).

* 'My recollection of the word "Actie" [in Liszt's "Bankactien"] was as a "joint-stock speculation" with art.' [Wagner's foot-note in the original letter.]

† The retort presumably alluded to is this: 'But I further assure you that you have not wounded me at all, as your darts never hit me; their barbs have remained caught in your heart. May this remove them from it.'—[W. A. E.]

Yes, it indeed was the commencement of a growing coolness upon Liszt's side; for we know how Wagner had to 'point a pistol even at your breast,' as he himself writes his friend in May, '59, to obtain even by Easter of that year 'the Dante dedicated to me,' albeit that minor acquaintances had received it six weeks earlier. But, merely repeating that not a word of this 1859 hailstorm is breathed in 'Mein Leben,' let me conclude with a note from the extreme end of our 'new Wagner-Liszt,' written in the mellow eventide of these two great friends' full reconciliation:

ILLUSTRIOUS FRIEND,—I always allow that you are right, even when you do me an injustice. So scold me according to pleasure; it will never mislead Thy faithful and for ever most-allegiant FRANCISCUS.—Freiburg, 30. April 81.

'ST. MATTHEW' PASSION.

The growth of the use of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music in this country is one of the cheering signs of the times in choral circles. Although this great work is not yet so well-known as are 'Elijah' and 'The Messiah,' it is not held in less esteem by the oratorio lovers who are familiar with its imposing grandeur, deep expression and profound beauty. With expanding use there has grown up a critical attitude towards the existing adaptation of the English words, and many points connected with the interpretation of the work have occasioned discussion. With all this in view, Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Ivor Atkins have collaborated to produce a new edition,* the words of which, although partly based upon existing editions, follow more closely the original German text. The following preface to the new edition will explain the views of the editors:

PREFACE.

No apology is offered for presenting a new edition of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion; there must always be room for every effort to do justice, in an English form, to the noblest sacred work in existence.

In preparing this edition, our aim has been:

- (a) In the recitatives, to retain the words of the Authorised Version, and at the same time to reproduce Bach's declamation as closely as the English words allow;
- (b) In the other portions, to adopt a translation which should present, as clearly as possible, Bach's unique method of setting his libretto.

RECITATIVES.

In adapting the A.V. it has been thought well in a few cases to alter the sequence of the words in order to preserve some characteristic point of the German version, or Bach's illuminative treatment of important words, e.g., the end of No. 8, and again in No. 73, where the musical setting makes the transposition of some words imperative.

In one number (No. 54), owing to the directness of the English text—there are fewer syllables than in Luther's version—it was important to adhere to the actual words of the narrative without any repetition, and this has been done by a slight rearrangement of the musical passage.

In the punctuation of the recitatives, the Oxford Reprint (1911) of the 1611 Edition of the A.V. has been followed.

LIBRETTO.

Two translations were placed at our disposal by the publishers—those of Miss Johnston and Dr. Troutbeck. This edition aims at retaining all that is best in both. Where neither was completely satisfactory, our object has been to replace it by a translation more faithful to the original. The oldest English version, that of Miss Johnston, beautiful as it is in its simplicity, is marred occasionally by a departure from the sense of the original; for example, 'O Mensch, bewein' dein' Sünde gross' (No. 35) is made to end with a doxology, instead of presenting the picture of Christ's suffering on the Cross, and in No. 29 the verse scheme does complete violence to Bach's musical phrases.

The libretto was the first consideration, and its revision has been the care of Mr. Ivor Atkins. From the outset, he was aided by the greatly-valued co-operation of Professor Charles Sanford Terry, M.A., who devoted himself unsparingly to the work of comparison and adaptation.

Modern Bach criticism, as exemplified in the writings of Parry, Spitta, Pirro, Schweitzer, Heuss, and others, has made it abundantly clear that if justice is to be done to Bach's methods, in particular to his pictorial and dramatic treatment of the libretto, a very great responsibility must be felt in the right choice of words, and especially the placing of the words in an already-existing musical framework.

It is hoped that the occasional changes which have been made, however they may be judged from a literary point of view, will be found to be justified by the light which they throw upon the characteristic side of Bach's work, and above all on his unerring sense of the colour of words.

CHORALES.

Where the translations are not those of Miss Johnston or Dr. Troutbeck, they have been drawn, with some modifications, from various hymnologies, and are the work of Miss Frances Cox, Miss Catherine Winkworth, Dr. J. W. Alexander, and Sir Henry Baker. Others have been wholly or partly written by the Rev. Rodney Fowler, Miss H. Cam, and Professor C. S. Terry.

Special importance attaches to the Chorales. Picander, the writer of the lyrical portions of the libretto, was not entrusted with the choice of words for them. From various sources, Bach himself selected verses well-known and popular with Lutheran congregations, the aptness of which satisfied him as commentaries on the scenes immediately preceding them. In this edition the greatest care has been taken to provide a translation which shall reflect faithfully the particular commentary insisted upon by Bach, and in one instance we have been guided by the principle of familiarity which actuated him, and have included two verses of Sir Henry Baker's 'O sacred Head surrounded,' although it is a translation from the Latin original.

There can be no doubt that, to carry out Bach's intentions, the Chorales should be accompanied in every instance by the orchestra, and should be sung with the natural expression called forth by the preceding scene. Such expression should be of a broad, corporate character, sympathy and sincerity alone being needed to secure it. To save space, the accompaniment, which is practically entirely reproduced from the voice parts, is not printed separately here.

CORO I. CORO II.

Bach divided his forces into two groups, each consisting of a separate orchestra, chorus, and soloists. Each group is referred to in the full score as Coro. I. or Coro II., or when combined as Coro I., II. All the Recitatives and most of the Solos are assigned to Coro I. (i.e., to orchestra and soloists in the 1st group), and in this edition, unless otherwise specified (e.g., Nos. 12, &c.), Coro I. is to be understood.

TEMPI, EXPRESSION, ETC.

Bach very rarely indicated the tempi. Where he has done so, his directions are printed in italics. The editors are responsible for those in roman type.

Expression marks printed in italics are Bach's; those in other type are the editors'. As Bach did not use any of the following signs: — < > ^ > — or cresc. or dim., those used will be recognised as editorial.

PHRASING.

The full score of the Bach Gesellschaft Edition has been followed. Bach's phrasing is a special study and, if interpreted with a modern, rigid sense of bar-lines, frequently becomes stiff and distorted. The same phrasing is immediately rendered clear when treated with the elasticity and freedom demanded by the outline, or, in many instances, by the sense of the words.

The phrasing of No. 35 is of particular importance; the semiquavers are slurred in two's, and in each case the second semiquaver should be played lightly. Following Gervaeert, we have written out two bars in full, indicating the manner in which the phrasing should be interpreted.

ORNAMENTATION.

Unfortunately, very vague ideas are held as to the execution of Bach's ornaments, in spite of the valuable work done by Dannreuther ('Mus. Orn.', vol. i.), who is the chief authority on the subject.

Though it is manifestly impossible to arrive at an interpretation which shall satisfy every one, yet it may be useful to indicate some cases where Bach's music has suffered much from ambiguity of interpretation.

No. 33 (p. 64). The passage written thus:—

Andante moderato
EX. I. Fl. & Ob.

should be performed thus :—

Ex. 2.

No. 47 (p. 112). The first four bars of the Violin Solo :—

Ex. 3.

which are more or less a key to the whole, should be executed thus* :—

Ex. 4.

No. 76 (p. 186). Alto part, first bar, should be sung thus :—

In No. 78 we have inserted appoggiature where we think they were intended by Bach, and have placed them in parentheses so that they can easily be omitted by those who do not accept them. It is possible that the appoggiature which are found in the orchestral parts of No. 33 should be incorporated in the solo parts, but this opens up a large question, and we have preferred to leave the music as printed in the Bach Gesellschaft score.

SCENES.

In dividing the work into Scenes, we have followed Gervae and Heuss in the main. There can be no doubt that such divisions are of the greatest help in making Bach's treatment of the Gospel narrative clear to the hearer.

Many valuable suggestions have been adopted from Parry's 'Bach,' Heuss's 'S. Matthäus' Passion,' Pirro's 'L'Esthétique de J. S. Bach,' and Schweitzer's monumental work, now fortunately accessible to English readers in Ernest Newman's translation.†

No author has shown more clear understanding of the nobility and spirituality of Bach's Passion than Sir Hubert Parry, and the particular chapter which he devotes to this work has been of the greatest assistance to us; his general view of Bach must always be a source of inspiration to students of the master.

THE PIANOFORTE PART.

The pianoforte part is based upon the version of A. B. Marx, but an entire revision was rendered necessary to make it conform to the full score issued by the Bach Gesellschaft, which must now be taken to be the definitive edition. In one or two instances we have added the sign tr in parentheses in places where it is practically certain that a shake was intended.

Following Schweitzer and the Bach Gesellschaft preface we have embodied the 'cello part played in No. 33 in the pianoforte arrangement. There is evidence that the 'cellos played in this number at Mendelssohn's revival of the work in 1829. The solo and chorus parts used on that occasion are still in existence, and an examination of them shows the necessary instrumental cues written at the 'cello pitch (an octave below the violas).

We acknowledge with gratitude help of various kinds received from Miss Ella Gibbs, Mr. Harry Evans, Miss I. Meiklejohn, Mr. A. E. Brent Smith, and others, and our special thanks are offered to Mr. Ernest Newman for many valuable suggestions.

Occasional Notes.

The present is a period of unusual productivity on the part of our best-known composers, to judge from the season's programme outlined in the prospectus issued by the Philharmonic Society, which celebrates its centenary next year. The fourth, fifth and sixth concerts, if promises are realised, will alone serve to introduce new orchestral works by Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. Edward German, a new Symphony (No. 7, in D minor) by Sir Charles Stanford, a new Orchestral Drama with a Prologue—'Fifine at the fair'—by Mr. Granville Bantock, and settings of 'Four famous lyrics' for voice and orchestra by Mr. Landon Ronald. Moreover, the three concerts given in the Autumn of 1912 will provide new orchestral works by Sir Frederic Cowen, Dr. Walford Davies and Sir Hubert Parry; new Orchestral variations, 'Life moods,' by Mr. Arthur Herve, and a new Song-cycle, 'The wind among the reeds,' by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill. This zeal for the presentation of new British works is highly gratifying, and is in accordance with the traditions of the Society. The dates and conductors of the concerts are as follow:—(1911), November 7, Herr Mengelberg; November 28, Sir Charles Stanford; December 5, Herr Safonoff. (1912), February 8, Sir Edward Elgar; February 22, Mr. Landon Ronald; March 21, Sir A. C. Mackenzie; May 23, Herr Nikisch; (1912, Autumn), November 7, Sir F. H. Cowen; November 21, not decided; December 5, Sir Hubert Parry.

The question whether opera is popular in this country is a perennial one. All the light of experience goes to show that expensive opera is a doubtful business, but that cheap opera is widely appreciated. Even in September, in London, we find the Carl Rosa Company at the Broadway Theatre (New Cross), and the Moody-Manners Company at the Grand Theatre, Fulham, simultaneously attracting audiences by their excellent all-round performances. Meanwhile, we have Signor Leoncavallo conducting his 'Pagliacci' twice a day at the Hippodrome, also before great audiences. The enterprising and able musical critic of the Standard recently published an interview with this popular composer, from which we make the extract given below.

Signor Leoncavallo said :

It is wonderful to find such a band of musicians in a music hall. I know nothing of these English institutions, but I know, judging from what I saw of the performance last night and from what I feel when conducting this morning, that in Italy, at any rate, we have no equivalent for such a place of amusement. An orchestra like that which I find here does not exist in our cafés concerts. Here you have thoroughly artistic programmes which are attractive to all classes. It is foolish to say that you English are not a musical nation. You are. Why grand opera is not universally popular is because it is an expensive luxury, and also because your impresarios will insist upon giving heavy German music. Wagner and Strauss can never be popular here. In Bayreuth Wagnerian cycles succeed because the place is so dull that any diversion is welcomed, but here—in London, where the sun shines and the world smiles!—Never! Give them melody and beautiful voices and harmony, and let them pay cheaply to hear them, and London will become as musically enthusiastic as our own Milano!

In all comparisons of the attendance at opera at home and abroad, it must be borne in mind that the Continental opera houses are subsidised, and that opera generally on the Continent would miserably collapse if the subsidies were withdrawn.

By the time these lines appear, the Sheffield World-Tour Choir will have arrived back in England, and will thus terminate a unique musical enterprise. The Choir left this country on March 17, and has since visited Canada, the United States, Queensland, New South Wales, New Zealand, Tasmania, Victoria, Adelaide, Perth (Western Australia), and South Africa, and is due in London on September 30. The business part of transporting and catering for 200 persons in a concert-giving journey round the world demanded exceptional organizing skill and foresight. It says much for the capacity of Dr. Charles Harriss, the originator and manager of the tour, that it has been accomplished with so much success. In our next issue we shall give a summary account of the doings of the Choir. Meantime we welcome them and their indefatigable conductor, Dr. Henry Coward, back to England.

We are not aware if Mr. P. Sousa, who wrote an article on 'National music' in a recent number of the Westminster Gazette, is the well-known march-king. At any rate it is curious to find a writer whose name is identical with that of so intensely national a composer arguing that nationalism does not exist in music. He commences :

I do not believe there is any such thing as nationalism in music. Music is a universal thing, and what is usually termed nationalism in music is really but enviroic suggestion. Supposing Wagner had been born in New York, is there any reason to suppose that he would not have written just the same music as he did? Supposing Mr. John Philip Sousa had been born in Naples, or Buda Pesth, or Peking, is there any reason to suppose that he would not have written the same marches and cake-walks? There is. The writer, if the last-quoted sentence is printed correctly, apparently considers that Wagner's inborn Germanism would be strong enough to resist all opposing influences—even 'enviroic suggestion.' In demolishing nationalism he seems to be establishing it more firmly than ever. Of course there is much force in 'enviroic suggestion,' but since the various compartments of environment happen in general to coincide with the various nations of the world, 'nationalism' is the better, and accepted, word. Mr. P. Sousa would presumably describe the American twang, French excitability, and Scottish canniness, not as national, but as enviroic. His instance of an American composer who so successfully imitated a Johann Strauss waltz as to delude the public tells us, as we knew already, that a pronounced type of light music can be successfully imitated, but it adds little to a discussion on nationality. The next phase of the article, which is highly kaleidoscopic, deals with Stephen Foster, a New York composer who originated a type of melody that came to be regarded as native to the soil of South America. This does not interest us, unless it is intended as an argument that there are no negro or any other folk-melodies native to the soil!

On pages 645 and 647 the correct reading of grace notes in Bach's works is dealt with by well-known musicians. It is illustrative of the complexity and uncertainty surrounding this vexed question that the conclusions of these writers do not agree. Mr. Maitland argues very cogently for a certain treatment of the grace notes in Bach's duet and chorus No. 33 'St. Matthew's Passion, and Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Ivor Atkins in their preface to the new edition of the work direct a different treatment. All these writers regard Dannreuther's great work on 'Musical Ornamentation' (two volumes of Novello's Primer Series) as the leading authority on the subject generally, but all the same, there is obviously room for doubt.

THE INTERPRETATION OF MUSICAL ORNAMENTS.

By J. A. FULLER MAITLAND.

[A PAPER READ AT THE INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL CONGRESS, JUNE, 1911.]

The revival of public interest in the music of old times is of course a most healthy sign of musical development; and we may justly claim to have the music presented to us with what approximation may be possible to the conditions of its original performance. Now that the keyed instruments which preceded the pianoforte are occasionally to be heard in concerts, it is far more desirable than it was that we should ascertain as fully as possible what was the meaning which the composers of different schools attached to the signs for the ornamental passages on which so much of their effect depended. Why, it may be asked, did they not write out their ornaments in full, as they wished them to be performed? There are several reasons for this, one of the most obvious being the labour to the transcriber; another was the not unnatural wish to guard the art of music and the profession of teacher by some small 'mysteries of the craft' which only a proficient could explain after he had been definitely initiated into the musical profession. There is a yet more powerful reason in this fact, that the practice of the composers ran, as it always does, far ahead of the theoretical science which could explain certain dissonances that were obviously delightful to the hearer and interesting to the executant. These dissonances, upon which the music seems naturally to dwell, were not referable to any harmonic scheme as then understood, and it was felt to be better to express by a conventional sign the fact that they stood outside the harmonic scheme. This is especially true with regard to the most important ornament of all, and the one which is most generally misunderstood in the present day, the 'appoggiatura,' to which I must direct your attention more closely later on. The other signs for ornaments, from the single or double diagonal lines above the notes used by the Elizabethan Virginal composers, to the crowd of marks used by the French and German writers immediately before Bach, are not really difficult to explain, and at each period we are happily provided with a guide on the subject in some treatise or other by a contemporary of the composers in whose works the marks occur. Unfortunately, we are left without such a guide in the earliest signs I have mentioned, but there seems to be no doubt that the double strokes indicate either a mordent or a pralltriller—probably the former—and that the single stroke stands for an appoggiatura—single or double—coming from below the principal note. One of the chief difficulties in regard to ornaments is that at different periods people have used the technical terms in different senses. It is stated by some authorities, though on what grounds I do not know, that the word 'mordent' was at one time used for what is generally called the 'pralltriller,' that is, of an ornament in which the auxiliary note is above the principal. Of course all the recognized writers on the subject apply the word 'mordent' to the sign with a little vertical stroke differentiating it from the sign for the 'pralltriller.' Happily all the existing treatises were most ably summarised by Dannreuther in his Primer of Ornamentation, and it is not necessary to dwell at length on the interpretation of these older signs, since in this book it is made fully clear what they all mean. It is in the case of the appoggiatura that the greatest confusion reigns, and it is the more curious that it should be so, since of all the ornaments this one has lingered longest in practical music, and the difference between a correct and an incorrect performance of it is enormous. Its conventional sign is of course a small note preceding one of the ordinary size. The 'acciaccatura,' represented by a small note with a stroke through it, has an assured place in notation, for the thing which it expresses could not possibly be expressed without it. The 'crushing' of a note into the chord it precedes is one of the most obvious of ornamental devices, and one of the few on which little difference of opinion can arise. But very often editors and publishers have not been sufficiently careful to distinguish between the small note with a stroke through it and the small note without a stroke, so that many editions of the classics exist in which it is almost impossible to tell which ornament of the two is meant till we refer to the original or to some facsimile reprint. The 'acciaccatura' remained in use in England in one very odd way, and I am told that it may still occasionally be heard in country churches. The desire of overcoming the lack of rhythmic definiteness inherent in the organ led to the indication of the starting-point of a chord by the introduction of the note immediately below the bass note as an acciaccatura, so that one used to hear effects like this:

If the study of ornaments and their interpretation were only in order to restore the practical performance of the older music, it might well be left to a few specialists who might be trusted to preserve the tradition; but as Mr. Dannreuther well says in his preface to the book I have mentioned, 'Several of the ornaments occur in daily practice, and the entire number cannot be ignored, were it only for the fact that Sebastian Bach makes extensive use of so many.' It is not only because of Bach's supreme position in music that this is said, but because it is precisely in Bach's music that modern editors and interpreters have, as I think, strayed farthest from the composer's intentions.* The student of Bach meets, at a very early stage of his studies, with a number of apparently contradictory ways of expressing these ornaments, which now are written out in full, now expressed by the conventional signs, and sometimes implied, not expressed at all. It has been suggested by Spitta, that his practice in this connection differed according to the class of performers for whom he was writing. In his Church Cantatas, for the most part, the recitatives close with the written notes exactly as they are to be sung; in some exceptional cases, the usual convention has to be observed and the cadence performed as if it were in Handel, the last note but one being written as if it were identical with the last note, though it is evident that the upper note is to be taken there. Even here his practice is not uniform, nor does he always make things clear even to the church singers. But as a rule he does, and in writing for the secular singers and players he uses the signs which they would most readily understand. But yet the ordinary appoggiatura is used in the conventional way throughout both sacred and secular works, and it is this which has puzzled so many well-meaning editors, who have as yet hit upon no regular method of interpreting its value. It can hardly be

* Since this paper was read, I have seen a recent finely-printed selection of arias from Bach's church cantatas, published by an eminent German firm, in which every one of the ornaments is wrongly interpreted.

ARIA CON VARIAZIONI.

This musical score is for an "ARIA CON VARIAZIONI" in 3/4 time, featuring a piano (P) and a violin (V). The score is written on seven systems of two staves each. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 3/4. The piano part is written in the bass clef, and the violin part is written in the treble clef. The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, accidentals, and dynamic markings like "P" (piano) and "Cres" (crescendo). The first system begins with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp. The second system includes a "Cres" marking. The third system includes a "P" marking. The fourth system includes a "Cres" marking. The fifth system includes a "P" marking. The sixth system includes a "Cres" marking. The seventh system includes a "P" marking. The score concludes with a double bar line.

denied that the best possible authority on the practice of Bach's own time is Daniel Gottlob Türk, although his 'Klavierschule oder Anweisung zum Klavierspielen für Lehrer und Lernende, mit kritischen Anmerkungen' did not appear until 1789, nearly forty years after Bach's death. Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach stood too near to his father's time to explain quite unmistakably the signs which were in ordinary use in his day, since every one understood them: but Türk embodies the practice of Bach's time with that of later composers, and gives us the clearest idea of what was in common use a little while before him. His account of the long appoggiatura or long 'Vorschlag' is admirably clear, although Dannreuther is right when he says that Türk's explanations 'cannot be strictly applied to compositions anterior to the time of C. P. E. Bach.' The long Vorschlag consists of a small note placed before a large one, and generally of the next lower denomination than the principal note, i.e., minim before a semi-breve, quaver before a crotchet, &c. The undisputed fact that this ornament occupies half the time of the principal note has led some later writers to suppose that the apparent value of the small note is in all cases to be deducted from the principal note, so that a 'Vorschlag' or appoggiatura which represents a quaver before a minim, will be of shorter duration than one which represents a crotchet in the same position. These modern interpreters leave out of account the all-important use of the appoggiatura before dotted notes, for Türk's rule is quite clear that in that case the small note robs the principal note of two-thirds of its value, so that whether in triple or duple time the principal note has to be contented with only one-third of its nominal value. This use of the 'Vorschlag' is ignored by almost all modern editors and interpreters, yet there are many cases in Bach's works where the strict interpretation according to Türk's rule would give a great additional grace to the music, and in all cases it would remove from it that jerky impression which is undoubtedly produced when the sign is ignored or interpreted according to the apparent value of the auxiliary note. The commonest form in which the appoggiatura occurs is in a group consisting of a quaver followed by two semiquavers and preceded by a little semiquaver. A great many musicians know that when this occurs it is to be played as a group of four even semiquavers, with a slight stress on the first of the group. There can be no doubt at all that in Boccherini's Violoncello sonata in A, a well-known passage in the Allegro which stands in the ordinary printed editions as should really be played with a long appoggiatura, as

The error here is of course due to the misprint of the appoggiatura as if it were an acciaccatura. A curious thing occurs as late as the overture to Rossini's 'Barbiere di Siviglia,' where a similar group of notes on its first occurrence is printed in the orchestral parts in the conventional manner as a small semiquaver before a group consisting of a quaver and two semiquavers, but at the second occurrence of the phrase the same group is written out in the way in which we should write it in the present day:

I have been told, by no less eminent an authority than the late W. S. Rockstro, that in his time it was universally understood that the groups were to be played exactly in the same way, and that the conventional notation was simply adopted in the first instance as a kind of acknowledgment of the obvious fact that the appoggiatura note made an unpermitted discord if it were taken as a real note. The fact that Señor Casals is accustomed to play the passage quoted from Boccherini with the short appoggiatura at its first occurrence and with the long one at the second, may indicate that he uses some edition in which the convention just referred to is embodied. Mr. Rockstro used to maintain, too, that the custom of writing the appoggiatura in this conventional way went on to much later days than one would think; and that Chopin's Prelude in B flat should be played with a long appoggiatura, thus:

One would not like to force this interpretation upon modern pianists, but if editors and others would approach the older music without their present conviction that the written note is to be interpreted as it would be in the present day, we should get a far more flowing effect in many things by Bach and other masters. There is a not uncommon objection to this traditional method of interpretation, based on the curious progressions that sometimes result, or where there are two appoggiaturas at once. For example, in the very difficult number in the 'St. Matthew' Passion, the duet and chorus 'So ist mein Jesus nun gefangen' (My Saviour Jesus now is taken), some of the appoggiaturas, if interpreted according to Türk's rule, do undoubtedly give very curious progressions, and it has therefore become customary to give them in a kind of compromise between the long and short 'Vorschläge,' sometimes allowing them no more than the length of an acciaccatura. Now, to say nothing of the ugly, jerky effect that this produces, can any one who realizes the wonderful effect of the quiet solo voices contrasted with the exclamations of the choir, hesitate to prefer an interpretation which makes for greater smoothness? If we desire to defend this interpretation, we must remember that the appoggiatura notes are entirely free from harmonic rules, and it did not really matter in the time of Bach whether such notes made even consecutive fifths with some other parts or not. The application of this same rule to thousands of other instances is a fascinating employment for the lovers of Bach, and it is one which may be recommended very specially to conductors and editors. I once had a talk to Mr. Dannreuther about the ornaments in the aria of Bach's 'Goldberg' Variations, in which he had hesitated to apply Türk's rule in its full meaning. When I played him the aria in accordance with that rule, he was so struck that he suggested bringing out a new edition of the Variations in order to explain in great detail how the air was to be played.

The usual text of the aria and the interpretation according to Türk's rule, are given on pp. 648, 650.

I do not wish to enforce my own opinions, or those of my masters and friends, upon modern students, but only to beg the moderns to compare the effect of the two interpretations, and to see if they do not agree with me that the conventional way (putting aside its high historical authority) is not also the most effective in the true sense.

THE ARIA ACCORDING TO TÜRK'S SYSTEM OF INTERPRETATION.

A musical score for a piece titled "THE ARIA ACCORDING TO TÜRK'S SYSTEM OF INTERPRETATION." The score is written for piano and is in 3/4 time. It consists of seven systems of music, each with a treble and bass staff. The key signature is one sharp (F#). The music features a variety of rhythmic patterns, including eighth and sixteenth notes, and rests. There are several dynamic markings, such as mf (mezzo-forte) and f (forte), and articulation marks like accents and slurs. The score is presented in a clear, legible format with standard musical notation.

* In this instance the strict interpretation of Türk's rule has been modified as, according to the letter of that rule, the C sharp would bear the strong accent on the third beat of the bar, and the point of the appoggiatura would be lost. The above reading may be justified by the assumption that the demisemiquaver C sharp, to which the crotchet is tied, is regarded as too short to bear the stress of which examples are to be found in bars five and six of the second part of the Aria, where the crotchet, tied to a semiquaver, loses virtually its entire value to the appoggiatura before it.

THE STRATFORD-UPON-AVON SUMMER SCHOOL OF FOLK-SONG AND DANCE.

JULY-AUGUST, 1911.

The movement for the preservation and revival of the use of folk-songs and dances continues to spread. The work of collecting is not yet completed; but enough has been done to enable an impartial estimate of its value, artistic and educational, to be formed.

A widespread and increasing interest in the subject has already been created by means of books, lectures, public demonstrations, and so forth. The effective dissemination, however, of the material recovered by collectors, in a way which shall have permanent results, is a task of great difficulty. It involves nothing less than the transference of the products of a primitive art from the unlettered peasants who created it, to the rest of the nation; in other words, the revival of songs and dances which, however beautiful and captivating they may be, are yet generically different from those to which the cultivated classes have hitherto been accustomed.

Naturally, it was upon the school teachers that the promoters of the movement, with their eyes upon the future, first concentrated their attention, because through them only could the children be reached. But school teachers, from the very nature of their occupation, are, except in holiday time, isolated from one another. The difficulty, therefore, was to devise a scheme based upon sound artistic and educational principles, and of so attractive a character that it would induce those who were desirous of introducing the songs and dances into their schools, to devote a part of their summer vacation to the study of the subject.

A tentative effort to solve this difficulty was made last year at Stratford-upon-Avon by the Governors of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, who for some time had been seeking an opportunity to assist the promoters of the movement. How and why they came to be attracted in this way will be presently explained. That their interest in the matter, however, is genuine enough, and has been expressed, too, in a very practical manner, the following detailed account of the actual work done at Stratford-upon-Avon during the Summer Festival just concluded is sufficient proof.

The Session lasted a full month, from July 22 to August 19, and the School was attended by students, over two hundred in number, who came from all parts of England, from Scotland, France, Canada, the United States, and Holland. Each student entered for one week at least, while some stayed for two, three, or even four weeks.

The classes were held every morning from 9 a.m. to 12.30 p.m., and—except on Saturdays—in the afternoons from five o'clock to half-past six. The Parish Parlour and three rooms in the Technical School were set aside for the use of the School. To avoid overcrowding, and in order that the classes might be properly graded, all four rooms were often occupied simultaneously.

The Director of the School, Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, was assisted by a Staff of five teachers, viz., Miss Kennedy, Miss Wilkinson, Miss Walsh, and the Misses Maud and Helen Karpales, all of whom were trained dancers and held the teachers' certificate of the Chelsea Physical Training College. The last three, above-named, were pianists as well as teachers; while Miss Pickupp, the sixth member of the Staff, could play the violin or pianoforte as required. The Staff was completed by Miss Mattie Kay, the well-known singer of folk-songs.

Every morning at 10 o'clock, at the conclusion of the first dancing class, all the students assembled in the large room of the Technical School to sing and study folk-songs. Each song was first sung by Miss Mattie Kay, the students—all of whom were supplied with books of music—afterwards singing it in unison. Between fifty and sixty folk-songs were studied in this way, nearly all of them each week. In the intervals between the songs Mr. Sharp explained the function of the folk-song in the elementary school, and gave advice as to the way in which he thought it should be used and taught. Short discussions were also initiated on various points kindred to the subject, as, for instance, the suitability for school use of nonsense songs (e.g., 'As I was going to Banbury'), love songs, highwayman's songs, poaching songs, &c.; whether folk-songs should be performed with or without action: the advantage of dispensing with an accompaniment in accordance with traditional usage; how far it was wise or possible to resuscitate a type of music that was rapidly falling into disuse among those who had created it—and so forth.

In this way many aspects of the folk-movement were reviewed and debated—sometimes with much amusement. The discussions were always interesting and often illuminating and instructive; and, altogether, this hour was much appreciated, and afforded a welcome relief from the more strenuous dancing lessons.

Upon the conclusion of the singing class a demonstration of the dances that had just been taught in the several rooms was given by the members of the Staff, sometimes supplemented by one or more of the advanced students. On one occasion Mr. Kimber, the well-known traditional dancer from Headington, performed several Morris jigs, in order that the students might see how the Morris dance was traditionally executed.

In addition to practical instruction, students were taught the elements of dance notation. A dance, for instance, would be written out in chorographic notation upon the blackboard, and the symbols carefully explained; after which the students would perform it. In this way the members of the class were not only taught this particular dance, but how to learn for themselves other and similar dances from the book without the aid of a teacher. To this end, the practical work of the dancing classes was concentrated very largely upon those elemental movements, e.g., the 'Morris-step,' the 'Side-step,' the 'Caper,' 'Showing,' &c., which, because of their very simplicity, are the most difficult to understand from a written description only.

Children's singing games were also taken from time to time, usually in the afternoons. The singing-dances,

'A-hunting we will go,' and 'Push the business on' (an interesting and, perhaps, unique survival of an old Country-dance Round), were especially popular. Altogether, during the four weeks, instruction was given in twenty-six Morris dances and jigs, twenty Country dances, three Sword dances, and several singing games. The Sword dances, though essentially for men, were learned by many of the lady students in order that they might teach them to the boys in their villages and schools.

Two lectures, respectively on 'English folk-song' and 'English folk-dance,' were given each week by the Director in the Memorial Lecture Room, and in each of the last two weeks a third lecture, at which lantern pictures of folk-singers and dancers, Morris fiddlers, &c., were exhibited. The folk-song lecture was illustrated with songs by Miss Mattie Kay, and the folk-dance lecture with dances by the members of the Staff. Mr. Cecil Sharp also explained the construction of, and played upon, a very beautiful specimen of the traditional instrument, the pipe and tabor, acquired by him in a Cotswold village in the neighbourhood of Stratford. Mr. Sharp's collection of Morris costumes, sticks, swords and other paraphernalia, was exhibited in the Memorial Lecture Room throughout the session.

From time to time the Director explained what he believed to be the especial uses in the School of the several types of folk-dance. The Morris, he pointed out, was regarded as a professional dance in the villages of its origin; it was performed only by picked men, the best and most agile dancers available. It was a difficult dance to learn, and required much time to be expended upon its practice. The Country dance, on the other hand, was the amateur, social dance of the people, easily learned and easily executed; very varied in character, too, if the Playford dances were drawn upon as well as the Longways dance. From these considerations Mr. Sharp argued that for young children, say, under twelve years of age, the Country dance was, except in special cases, more suitable than the Morris. On the other hand, educationally speaking, the Morris was a most valuable dance because of the discipline, the long practice, and close attention to minute technical detail, which its proper performance demanded. For older children and Canning Town, taught by the Misses Karpales; and a team of sword dancers from Nottingham, under the leadership of Mr. E. Phillips Barker; on August 11, students from the Retford Pupil Teachers' Centre, under the direction of Mr. Hercy Denman; and traditional country dancers from the neighbouring villages of Honnington and Armscote; on August 18, a team of girls, and another of boy-scouts, from Glastonbury, under the direction of the Rev. A. Hook. The dancers from Retford, Canning Town and Glastonbury were all prize-winners at important local competitions who, because of their prowess, were invited to perform at Stratford for the benefit of the students. They stayed for one or two nights, saw Shakespeare plays, were taken on the river, and were treated during their visit as guests of the authorities.

At the third demonstration on August 11 the Misses Fuller sang several folk-songs to the accompaniment of the Irish harp, a very effective instrument for adults it was perhaps the ideal school dance; although, as an ordinary every-day dance for younger children, it must be used with great discretion.

The chief virtue of the Sword dance, apart from its physical and æsthetic qualities, lay in the attraction that it held for boys. No youth would object to dance with a live sword in his hand, whereas it was sometimes difficult to persuade him to take part in the Morris or country dances. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that the Sword dance has already been introduced into one of our leading public schools, and that it is now being taught in training ships, to boy-scouts and others.

In addition to the regular classes and lectures, a public exhibition of folk-dancing was given every week. These demonstrations were held on Friday afternoons in the Theatre Gardens, the dancers being drawn from various parts of the country. The following teams performed: On July 28, men and women students of the Chelsea Physical Training Colleges; on August 4, little children from the Mansfield House Settlement, the purpose, especially in the open air; while at the last demonstration folk-songs were sung by Miss Mattie Kay.

A masque, too, 'The Merry Haymakers,' written and produced by Mrs. Harris, consisting mainly of folk-songs and dances, was performed on Bank Holiday in the Theatre by a troupe of sixty or seventy children from Oswaldtwistle, Lancashire.

It should be added that for an inclusive weekly fee of £1 12s. 6d. each student, besides admission to the regular dancing and singing classes, received tickets for seven Shakespeare plays at the Memorial Theatre, and many other minor privileges. Each Saturday morning Mr. F. R. Benson visited the Technical School and gave the students a short address upon one or other of the plays produced during that week.

From the above description it will be seen that what with the dancing and singing classes, the lectures, demonstrations, plays at the theatre, &c., the students were kept fully occupied. Apparently, however, and despite the intense heat, every one seemed to enjoy himself and to enter heartily into the holiday spirit of the place. The keenness and intelligence shown by the students and their regular attendance at the classes was quite remarkable. But this of course was to be expected; for only those in close sympathy with the movement, who had felt the beauty and realised the educational value of our national music, would voluntarily devote a week of their summer vacation to school work. No wonder, then, that the students were keen; so keen indeed that many expressed a wish to renew their studies at the earliest opportunity; and it is possible that a Session may be held in the winter holidays, probably in the first week after Christmas.

The large attendance and the success which the Summer School undoubtedly achieved shows that it satisfied a genuine need. The revival of the practice of folk-singing and dancing in the universities, schools, clubs, and settlements, and elsewhere, is proceeding apace; as fast indeed as the friends and pioneers of the movement could possibly or reasonably desire.

The need of the moment is not so much to arouse enthusiasm as to guide it into the right channel. And this is mainly a question of education; for the folk-movement is, primarily, an artistic one. Consequently, the immediate problem, upon which the promoters of the movement would do well to concentrate their attention, is how to provide school-teachers, scout-masters, and others with competent instruction and advice, so that the dances and songs of the people may be launched and disseminated in their best, purest and most traditional forms.

Two years ago the Board of Education very wisely recommended the introduction of folk-dances into the elementary and secondary schools. So far, however, they have done little or nothing to supply their teachers with the requisite technical knowledge. This, as is so often the case in this country, has been left to private effort. For two years or more, men and women teachers have been carefully trained in the mysteries of English folk-dancing at the Chelsea Physical Training Colleges, where periodical examinations are held and teachers' certificates granted to successful candidates. Some effort has, then, unofficially been made to satisfy the demand for professionally-trained teachers.

The Summer School, above described, is a further attempt to meet the necessities of the case. Stratford-upon-Avon, the home of Shakespeare, situate in the middle of England, readily accessible from all parts of the country, annually attracts a large number of visitors—we believe that 50,000 persons passed through the birth-house last year. Moreover, it is already the centre of a great national movement. For the last thirty-four years, the Governors of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre—the only endowed theatre in England—by a yearly presentation of a series of his plays, the establishment of a Shakespearean library and picture gallery, and in various other ways, have striven to foster and encourage the study and love of Shakespeare.

Now in the works of Shakespeare the English people found, if not their first, certainly their most complete expression. To propagate, therefore, a knowledge and understanding of the Shakespearean drama is to nourish and quicken the spirit of nationalism, to stimulate the growth of a pure and wholesome patriotism. Shakespeare is called our greatest national poet because, in a higher degree than anyone else, he was the spokesman of our race—the mouthpiece, as it were, of the English folk, in the wider sense of that word. It is here that the link between the two movements, now associated with Stratford, is to be found.

For the folk-art of a country, whatever its artistic merits or demerits, is the sincere expression of a community, the embodiment, in terms of literature, dance, or song, of national ideals and aspirations. Indeed, in the nature of things, an intimate and abiding relationship must always exist between the conscious, intentioned works of the really great, individual artist, and the un-selfconscious output of the people from which he sprang. What, then, Shakespeare, the individual, achieved through the medium of dramatic art, the folk have, in a lesser degree, because within narrower limits, collectively expressed in their own primitive art.

Naturally, then, the Governors of the Memorial Theatre were among the first to sympathise with the pioneers of the revival of English folk-song and dance, and, latterly, to give them practical aid in the advancement of their cause.

THE MISSES FULLER SINGING FOLK-SONGS.

Hence it is that the small country town of Stratford-upon-Avon is now the centre of two educational schemes of the highest national significance, both moving on parallel lines toward the same goal. The first and the elder of these is already established, and, if the experiences of the last month may be taken as an augury, it will not be long before there will be erected by its side a National School of Folk-song and Dance, which, by giving cohesion to the various forces at work, by conserving tradition and upholding a high standard of performance, will rest upon a secure and enduring foundation.

It may interest many readers to know that classes for the study of Morris, Country and Sword-dancing, and Children's Singing Games, under Mr. Sharp, will be held this winter at the South-Western Polytechnic Institute, Manresa Road, Chelsea. Full particulars can be obtained from Miss Wilks, at the Institute.

NEW CHORAL CANTATA.

This cantata for soli, chorus and orchestra is by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and has just been published. It is a setting of a poem by Alfred Noyes, and is in narrative form. The story relates how Yoichi Tenko, the painter, was the guardian of little O Kimi San, the orphan child of his brother. A student, Sawara, came to learn at the painter's school, and showed such aptitude that he was told he could learn no more from the school of Tenko, and must seek inspiration and fortune elsewhere. Then it appeared that O Kimi San and Sawara were lovers. But the young artist was impelled to seek a career before he was united to Kimi, and the lovers parted with the hope of soon meeting again. Tenko, however, had other designs for Kimi, and after untruly declaring that Sawara was unfaithful he induced her to marry a rich young merchant 'with bags of gold.' Sawara, now famous, returns to the school of Tenko, and finds that Kimi is wedded, but he is readily consoled elsewhere. Later he meets Kimi, who still indulges her love for him, and when she finds that he is cold to her

Trembling, she lifted her head,
Then like a broken blossom,
It fell on his arm. She was dead.

It is an old story retold in quaint and interesting style, and in a metre that adapts itself readily to musical setting. The composer seems to revel in the opportunities of musical effect it presents. We are constantly reminded of melodic, harmonic and rhythmical idioms that in 'Hiawatha' made him one of the most popular choral composers of the day. But there are added to this astonishing fluency of invention much grace and an occasional poignancy. The music is without break, and it presents great variety and ample occupation for the chorus. Four solo voices are required. We think we are justified in prophesying a wide popularity for the new cantata. It takes about an hour to perform.

Church and Organ Music.

IS AN ORGANIST TOO OLD AT FORTY, AND WHY SHOULD HE BE CONSIDERED SO?

Under the above title, a discussion is in progress in a contemporary on this really important question. We may as well say at once that our sympathies and support are on the side of the man of years and experience. But music is not the only sphere in which this ridiculous cry is being raised. It is too readily assumed that the best results in any ordinary profession or business are necessarily obtained from young men. Where actual physical strength is concerned there may be ground for such an opinion, and many examples will readily suggest themselves. But where experience and well-matured methods are held to be of value, it is surely to the man possessing them that a wise employer will turn. It is so easy to invent or drop upon a phrase such as 'too old at forty,' and then to class our fellows as on one side or the other. After all, what are the objections to a man of forty? Are his powers beginning to fail? Is his energy less strenuous? Is his personal character yet unformed? We shall find it difficult to advance any of these against an organist who has reached that landmark. The young man (and we speak from personal experience, and regret our own early shortcomings) often thinks too much of himself, his personal attributes, his use of the full organ, and the brilliancy of his technique. His management of boys often leaves much to be desired; and in this connection it is extraordinary to see the attitude of the young modern organist. The organ itself is his one thought, and his methods of accompaniment show his impatience. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the instrument sounds at times in a 'bad temper,' which is simply that of the organist reflected in it. This may be thought an exaggerated example, but we can recall more than one illustration of what we mean. There are no doubt a sufficient number of organists who have passed the great age limit (!) whose performances may give rise to question. But we claim that in a man of forty or more years old, there is all the greater chance of finding the characteristics necessary for his important duties. It will generally be seen that the older man more fully realises his duties as a choir-master, and this alone gives him a claim to be heard. Again, there are no doubt very many younger men of high attainments who would adorn any post; but is that a sufficient reason for shutting out so many equally gifted men of greater experience both of their duties and of the world? We could mention many examples of admirable work being done in obscure corners by men of fifty, while the names of more than one of our prominent organists who are nearer seventy than sixty, and whose work is an example to the young red-hot organ recitalist, will at once suggest themselves. These men have no doubt the 'energy of position,' but they are examples of what might be found more often if the chances were more equal. We plead with the clergy and others who have the power of election to consider the claims of the man of experience equally with those of the tyro. They have the power, goodness knows, of replacing us should we fail. But we honestly believe that such cases would be few, and at least a real injustice would be removed.

The organ in St. John's Cathedral, Hong Kong, was entirely overhauled and rebuilt in 1909, but we are glad to note that the organist, Mr. Denman Fuller, hopes to add a double trumpet to the swell, a bass flute to the pedal, and to complete the violone by inserting the twelve lower pipes. These steps are all, in our opinion, necessary, and we hope to learn that the requisite funds will be forthcoming. Mr. Fuller has commenced a series of organ recitals in the Cathedral, which he hopes to carry on through the winter months.

On Saturday, June 24, at St. Andrew's Church, Kowloon, Hong Kong, the new organ built by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons was dedicated by the Bishop. An organ recital was given by Mr. E. J. Chapman, who included, in his programme, works by Guilman, Widor and Merkel. A recital was also given later by Mrs. W. J. Tibbe.

On September 11, Mr. Gatty Sellars commenced his third American tour in two years. After visiting nearly forty Canadian cities he will give over a hundred recitals in the principal cities of the United States.

Reviews.

Te Deum Laudamus, set to music in the key of D major. By Sir C. Hubert H. Parry.

Te Deum Laudamus, set to music in the key of B flat. By Sir George C. Martin.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

When setting the noble words of the Te Deum for the great Coronation service, Sir Hubert Parry evidently realised the unusual conditions under which his music would be heard, while the historic nature of the occasion suggested to him the appropriateness of taking old Church melodies as his principal themes. Breadth, dignity and variety of treatment were demanded by the large space and the entirely adequate body of singers and players upon whom devolved the great duty and honour of its interpretation. That these three attributes were in the highest degree materialised in the hands of so fine a workman goes without saying, and to our mind the Te Deum is worthy to rank with anything of the kind yet written.

The work is built upon three distinct themes, viz.: St. Ann's tune, the Old Hundredth, and the Intonation to the Credo. Of the first two, great use is made throughout, while the Intonation is introduced with excellent and logical effect at the words 'The Holy Church' and again after 'to all believers.' The first phrase of the introduction consists of the first four notes of St. Ann, and frequent allusion is made to this and the other sections of the tune. The opening section of the Old Hundredth appears in diminution at the words 'all the earth' and again, in a minor key, before the phrase 'Heaven and earth,' while at 'we worship Thy Name' a truly colossal effect is obtained by the introduction of the first section in longer notes and in strict modal harmony ff. But the trained ear will discover the various fragments of the two tunes in unsuspected places. A point of great effect occurs immediately after the words 'let me never be confounded,' when, as if in answer to the cry, one hears (moderato e tranquillo) the sturdy first phrase of 'O God our help.'

The setting is throughout characteristic of the broad, healthy method of its author, and proved entirely worthy of the great occasion which called it forth. We were glad to find it included in the scheme for the Worcester Festival, and though it must not be considered as service music, there will no doubt be many occasions when its performance will be appropriate. It is certainly worthy of the highest use, and should at least be known by all who appreciate the traditions of English sacred music.

It is interesting to study the change of style exhibited in Sir George Martin's setting, and yet to note the equality he shows with Sir Hubert Parry in dignity and breadth of treatment. Written for an occasion second only to the Coronation in its importance, viz., the Thanksgiving Service of their Majesties at St. Paul's Cathedral, the setting is in every possible way appropriate. Brief without seeming so, interesting in melodic, choral and rhythmic matter, and containing fine climaxes, it must always be remembered by those who heard it as a fitting expression in musical terms of the thanks of our King and Queen. Several sections stand out for their beauty, among which we may mention the diatonic phrase, 'Heaven and earth,' which appears twice later. The enharmonic change introducing the words, 'Holy, Holy, Holy,' is finely managed, and the treatment of those words ff is majestic in its effect. We welcome the use of the fortissimo, for do not the angels cry aloud? Another fine point occurs at 'Thou art the King of Glory,' where effective use is again made of enharmonic change, while the three-repeated phrase grows each time in intensity by successively reaching a higher note. The setting seems to us to weld together the old and new methods in a marked degree, and could only have been written by one who has been through the refining schools of our church music, without allowing his invention to run in one groove, which is the great danger of the organ loft. We are confident that the work will be heard at many a Church Festival, and as the accompaniment has been arranged for various groups of instruments, or for organ alone, there can be no difficulty in this respect.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Modern British Album for the pianoforte. Pieces by various composers.

Over the prairie. Two 'Impressions' for the pianoforte. Valse Caprice. By Cyril Scott.

Romance. By Arthur Hinton.

Sous bois. By Edgar Barratt.

German Village scenes. By R. Kreutzlin.

It serves a good purpose to collect a few of the light and airy trifles of our living composers within one cover in the manner of this 'Modern British Album,' especially when, as in the present instance, the result has the right sequence of contrasted numbers, all on the same refined artistic plane, homogeneous in spirit, and entirely within average technical limits. Another advantage is a great saving to the purse. The numbers in this volume are 'Asphodel,' by Mr. Cyril Scott, 'A Memory,' by Mr. Norman O'Neill, 'To a village maiden,' by Mr. Ernest Halsey, 'Waggoner's song' by Mr. G. H. Clutsam, and 'Valse gracieuse' (which is more akin to a Mazurka), by Miss Ethel Barns.

Mr. Cyril Scott's two 'Impressions,' which are an Andante and an Allegretto under the collective title 'Over the prairie,' are typical examples of his delicate painting in half-tones, and when interpreted and judged with sympathy towards their pictorial aims, will be found to contain some charming and individual effects. The Valse Caprice is absolute music and more superficial, but just as individual.

The graceful sentimentality of Mr. Hinton's Romance, with its fervent, if somewhat sugary, climax and subsequent fading away into sweet nothingness will attract many, especially of the fair sex, on the look-out for an effective drawing-room piece. 'Sous bois,' a Forest Idyll, by Mr. E. Barratt, appeals to the same audience, particularly those members whose affections are rooted to the Victorian past, the age of Sidney Smith and his pretty pianistic ornamentations.

Mr. Kreutzlin in his 'German Village Scenes' aims solely at writing music for little hands and young brains, and he succeeds very well.

Franz Liszt and his music. By Arthur Hervey. With a portrait.

[John Lane, The Bodley Head.]

This is a short and readable account of the great Hungarian musician's life and works, by a writer who is an enthusiastic admirer of Liszt's genius. At the moment when the centenary of the birth of the composer-pianist is being widely noticed, the volume should be welcomed by many of the present generation of music students who are often only dimly aware that Liszt was something more than the greatest virtuoso pianist the world has ever seen. Mr. Hervey declares that the creator of the Symphonic Poem was one of the greatest, sincerest, and most original musical thinkers of the 19th century.

THE CONSETT CO-OPERATIVE CHOIR.

In Memoriam.—AUGUST 26.

Probably all of our readers will have read with sorrow and great sympathy of the terrible accident that befell the Consett (Durham) Co-operative Choir, of thirty-three members, whilst on its way to Prudhoe, twelve miles west of Newcastle. The party was in a large motor char-à-banc, and whilst the vehicle was descending a steep decline, known as the Long Close Bank, the brake failed to act, with the consequence that the speed increased to fifty or sixty miles an hour. At this pace the char-à-banc was precipitated against a tree and entirely wrecked. The driver wonderfully escaped, but ten of the passengers were killed outright, and nearly all the remainder were more or less seriously injured. The names of the killed were as follows: John Thomas Carr, 34, schoolmaster; Thomas William Barron, 36, boiler fireman; Hilda Dunn Whittaker, 30, head-mistress, and her sister, Lydia Ethel Whittaker, 29, school teacher, both unmarried; Henrietta Stoker, 23, unmarried; Florence Edith Egglestone, unmarried; Sarah Dunn, 26, draper's assistant, unmarried; John Pearson, jun.; Ralph Pearson, insurance agent; Maud Davison, unmarried.

This choir was very well known in the county of Durham. For five consecutive years it carried off the Northern Co-operative Society Shield. Four of the deceased were members of the choir of Consett Wesleyan Church.

The occurrence will for many years be a sad memory for the town.

THE FALLING OF PITCH.

The Times critic, commenting on the performance of Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' (eight parts unaccompanied, occupying about ten minutes) at the recent Worcester Musical Festival, where the choir consisted of 275 picked singers, remarks, 'that the pitch dropped considerably in the course of the work, but that is not really a very serious defect, and is often almost a necessary corollary to expressive singing.' The italics are ours, and we commend these words to the consideration of many persons who appear to think that the maintenance of pitch is almost the only thing worth living for. And yet the majority of listeners have not the faintest idea whether the pitch is lost until they strike a tuning fork or a chord on the pianoforte!

We have received the official programme of the National Eisteddfod to be held next year. Our special attention is drawn to an 'important notice' in the book, which states that the information supplied is the exclusive copyright of a firm of publishers in Wrexham. We therefore abstain from mentioning the place, date, test-pieces and adjudicators.

A meeting will be held at Arundel Castle on Tuesday, November 14, to discuss a scheme for the establishment of a competition festival in that district of Sussex. Dr. McNaught will give an address, and the Duchess of Norfolk will preside.

MORECAMBE.—April 30, May 1, 2 and 3. Mr. Percy W. de Courcy Smales, Festival Offices.

BLACKPOOL.—October 10 to 14.

The entries received for this great Northern Festival constitute a record even for this mammoth event. They number over 900, and include over 5,000 competitors. Solo singing for some years past has become a great speciality at this centre. The best amateur and semi-professional talent is drawn. This year no fewer than 410 singers have entered for the solo classes, and over 100 of these have elected to sing certain songs in the foreign language in which they were composed. All these competitors are placed in special classes which are one of the novelties of the year's Festival. The 'Charles Manners' competition for an operatic quartet has drawn four parties. The test is the Garden Scene from Gounod's 'Faust.' The competitors are to appear in costume, and to reproduce the scene as in the opera. The usual scenery and properties will be provided on the ample stage of the Winter Gardens Theatre. This interesting competition will be held on the evening of Wednesday, October 11.

The Daily News Challenge Trophy will be competed for by five full orchestras. This is the greatest number of orchestras ever attracted to this Festival. The test is Gluck's overture, 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' with Wagner's ending added for concert purposes.

To lovers of fine choral performances the most attractive feature will be the Open Chief Choral Classes, in which an unusual number of the best small choirs in the country have entered. The following are the entries in these classes, which will be heard on Saturday, October 14:

FEMALE-VOICE.

Tests: Six-part motet, 'Queen of heaven,' Op. 37, No. 3 (Brahms), unaccompanied.

Trio, accompanied, 'The rhyme of the four birds' (Mackenzie).

Stourbridge Ladies' Choir, St. James's Ladies' Choir, Barrow (Mrs. Bourne); Mr. Aldous's Choir, Lancaster; Blackpool Orpheus, South Shore Ladies' Choir, Padiham Ladies' Choir, Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society.

MALE-VOICE (tenor lead).

Tests: 'Old German battle song' (Richard Strauss) Op. 42, No. 2.

'Lucifer in starlight' (Granville Bantock).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'A song of love's coming' (Mackenzie).

'Sweet honey-sucking bees' (Wilbye).

'Spirit of Night' (eight parts) (Granville Bantock).

All unaccompanied.

Morecambe Madrigal Society, Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, South Shore Choir, Halifax Madrigal Society, Barrow Madrigal Society, Sale and District Musical Society, Stourbridge Institute Madrigal Society, Blackpool Orpheus Glee Society, Mr. Aldous's Choir, Lancaster; Mr. Noah Moore's Douglas Choral Society.

Numerous other adult choirs will appear in other sections. The following is a brief outline of the arrangements for the five days:

Tuesday, October 10.—Junior solo singing and playing; Action songs; Maypole dance.

Wednesday, October 11.—Senior classes for instrumental solos. The chief baritone, bass, and contralto solo sections, and the operatic quartet.

Thursday, October 12.—Soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor quartet and quintets; Local female-voice choirs.

Friday, October 13: The children's day.—Junior solo singing; Elementary school choirs; Action-song; Church choirs.

Saturday, October 14.—The open challenge shields competition, and Orchestras.

The adjudicators will be Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Ernest Newman, Mr. John Nicholls (Hallé Orchestra), Mr. W. Granger, organist at Kendal Parish Church; Mr. Frederic Austin, the well-known baritone; Madame Edith Hands, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Mr. Francis Harford, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Mr. Charles Riseigari, and Mr. C. H. Fogg.

It is to be hoped that the audiences will be commensurately large. No doubt the inevitable spreading of the Festival over five whole days (from about 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.) makes great demands upon enthusiasm. But the sisters, cousins, and aunts of 5,000 competitors must be interested and numerous.

Inquiries as to tickets should be addressed to Mr. Lionel A. Franceys, Festival Offices, Blackpool.

CANNOCK.—August 21.

This was a choral competition in three classes: female-voice, male-voice, and mixed-voice. The test-pieces and chief results were as follows:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'Ye banks and braes' (Percy E. Fletcher).

Five choirs competed.

1st. Stourbridge (Mr. Woodhall).

2nd. Wednesbury (Mr. Ernest Amplett).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'The martyrs of the arena' (L. de Rillé).

- 1st. Wolverhampton Apollo (Mr. H. Underwood).
 2nd. Hadley Orpheus (Mr. H. R. Jones).
 3rd. Stourbridge (Mr. Woodhall).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'By Babylon's wave' (Gounod).

- 1st. Wednesbury (Mr. E. Amplett).
 2nd. Bloxwich (Mr. J. Bentley).
 3rd. Mr. Johnson-Peters's Choir.
 Mr. Harry Evans adjudicated.

CO-PARTNERSHIP FESTIVAL, HAMPSTEAD GARDEN SUBURB.—August 26.

This competition was open only to choirs connected with co-operative and co-partnership societies. It was held in the Institute, Central Square, Hampstead Garden Suburb. Mr. Allen Gill adjudicated.

In every class one own-choice piece in addition to the stipulated test was sung.

JUNIOR CHOIRS (30 to 40 voices).

'Co-partnership Trophy.'

Test: 'The shepherd' (H. Walford Davies).

- |      |                                     |        |
|------|-------------------------------------|--------|
|      | Luton (Mr. Walter Haith) ... ..     | Marks. |
|      | 'Orpheus with his lute' (German).   |        |
| 2nd. | Portsmouth (Mr. G. J. Adams) ... .. | 122    |
|      | 'Winds gently whisper' (Whittaker). |        |
| 1st. | Stratford (Mr. A. Sears) ... ..     | 159    |
|      | 'The snow' (Elgar).                 |        |
|      | Edmonton (Mr. J. Batty) ... ..      |        |
|      | 'Here in cool grove' (Mornington).  |        |

'Ideal Trophy.'

Test: 'O swallow, swallow' (Gustav von Holst).

- |      |   |        |

NEW BRIGHTON (LIVERPOOL).—September 16.

This event was again successful. It drew about 140 solo-singing entries, but fortunately for the two adjudicators, Dr. McNaught and Mr. Harry Evans, they did not all appear. The singing exhibited was on the whole very creditable, and some of it reached a very high standard. The tests were: Soprano, 'Spring' (Henschel); contralto, 'Ché faro' (Gluck); tenor, 'Come, gentle sleep (Sullivan); baritone and bass, 'Vulcan's song' (Gounod). As the competitors came on in an order not specified in the programme, and in many cases adopted assumed names, we are unable to ascertain who won. Eight duettists sang Rossini's 'Quis est Homo,' and some showed first-rate ability.

In the Juvenile Choral Section the following choirs sang: Marks.

- |      |   |     |
|------|---|-----|
|      | Bourne Juvenile Prize Choir (Mr. W. J. Salt) ...                    | 130 |
|      | Cloughton Juvenile Choir (Mr. Tom Lloyd) ...                        | 134 |
|      | Cor Plant y Pentre, Liverpool (Mr. R. T. Edwards) ... ..            | 129 |
|      | Gronant Juvenile Choir (Mr. W. Humphreys) ...                       | 137 |
| 1st. | Rhos (Bethlehem) Juvenile Prize Choir (Mr. Jacob Edwards) ... ..    | 146 |
|      | Sutton Road Wesleyans (Mr. Wm. Knapper) ...                         | 135 |
| 2nd. | Mr. Turner's Girls' Prize Choir, Nottingham (Mr. Wm. Turner) ... .. | 138 |
|      | Birkenhead, Woodchurch Road School Choir (Mr. G. D. Kermode) ... .. | 137 |
|      | New Hey Church of England School (Mr. Edgar Quarumby) ... ..        | 124 |

The tests were 'Out with the tide' (Berger) and 'Drake's drum' (Coleridge-Taylor). The maximum marks for the two pieces were 160.

All the singing showed careful training, and good intonation was the rule. Some choirs had been rather overtrained, and therefore their singing had the chilling taint of artificiality both as to tone, production and expression. Rhos gave an excellent performance of both pieces.

In the Male-Voice Choir Class the tests were 'Peace, be still' (David Jenkins) and 'Give a rouse' (Bantock). Both were unaccompanied. The entries and results were as follows: Marks.

- |      |  |     |
|------|--|-----|
|      | Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. James Hardy) ... ..                   | 127 |
|      | Barnoldswick Glee Union (Mr. Frederick Lord) ... ..          | 129 |
|      | Birkenhead Apollo (Mr. Tom Lloyd) ... ..                     | 130 |
| 2nd. | Butt Lane Industrial Co-operative (Mr. George Clarke) ... .. | 141 |
|      | Gorton (Mr. Thomas Corlett) ... ..                           | 121 |
|      | Salford (Mr. David Grundy) ... ..                            | 123 |
| 1st. | Todmorden (Mr. Lawson Berry) ... ..                          | 149 |
|      | Warrington Apollo (Mr. Emlyn Davies) ... ..                  | 136 |
|      | The Warrington (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) ... ..                    | 130 |
|      | Wavertree Imperial Glee Union (Mr. David Green) ... ..       | 104 |
|      | Wigan Harmonic (Mr. E. C. Robinson) ... ..                   | 130 |

In the Mixed-Voice Choir Section the tests down were 'In vain you tell' (D. Emlyn Evans) and 'Hymn to music' (Dudley Buck), but only the latter was sung. The entries and results were as follows: Marks.

- |      |  |    |
|------|--|----|
|      | Armley Choral Society (Mr. H. H. Pickard) ...                            | 73 |
|      | Ashton-in-Makerfield Musical Society (Mr. John Davies) ... ..            | 65 |
| 1st. | Colne Valley Vocal Union* (Dr. T. E. Pearson) ... ..                     | 76 |
|      | Eccleshill Prize Choir (Mr. J. T. Wilcock) ...                           | 61 |
|      | Hanley and District Choral Society (Mr. E. C. Redfern) ... ..            | 70 |

Colne, therefore, again won, and they will now own the Shield. Mr. Llew. Wynne is the secretary of this event.

GREAT MUSICAL TOURNAMENT IN PARIS.

WHITSUNTIDE, 1912.

WE are informed that the Council of the City of Paris has organized an International Music Tournament to be held in Paris at Whitsuntide next year, the dates being May 25, 26, and 27. It is hoped that representative choral and orchestral societies of all nations will take part. Prizes to the money value of more than £8,000 are offered, and there will be numerous other awards such as diplomas, trophies, and medals. Over 450 choral societies, orchestras, and bands from Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Belgium, France, and Germany have already entered. MM. Saint-Saëns, Massenet, Gabriel Faure, Widor, Paladilhe, Henri Maréchal, Chevillard, Gabriel Piërne, and Vidal are among the members of the Organizing Committee.

The Honorary Committee includes all those named above, and Sir Edward Elgar, Charpentier, Vincent D'Indy, Debussy, Erlanger, Puccini, Andre Messager, and many other famous names; and the Jury which will judge the contests includes MM. Chevillard, D'Estournelles de Constant, Louis Ganne, Vidal, Spork, Pares, Maréchal, Piërne, De Valombrosa, Pessard, de Rillé, and de la Tour.

The following are extracts from a letter which is being sent to the choral societies, orchestras, &c., of Great Britain: 'Pressing appeals will be made to the various railway and shipping companies for reductions to ensure for competing societies the minimum expense and individual passes for members desirous of prolonging their stay in Paris after the termination of the three days' festival.

'A special committee has been appointed to cater, and generally to see to the comfort of the members of foreign societies.

'It is estimated that between 30s. and 40s. can be made to cover the entire cost of the return journey from London and complete board and residence during the three days of the festival.

The final paragraph is warmly eloquent:

'In inviting the societies of all nations to this grand tournament we have in view the great benefit that may result to civilization; helping different nations to learn to appreciate and to know each other; the benefit and the love of peace and goodwill that must result through the intermixing and friendly intercourse of this great family of harmony, and to be able once more to join in a hearty and vigorous chorus of "Vive l'Entente Cordiale."

This letter is signed by Alphonse Deville, G.C.V.O., a former president and present member of the Paris City Council, who is president of the organizing committee; Andre Gresse, the Commissary General; and Henri Bonnaire, the Agent-General for Great Britain, whose offices are at 20, High Holborn, London, W.C. Mr. Bonnaire will send entrance forms to all who require them, and will gladly answer all inquiries.

There is a general desire among the officials connected with the Tournament that the contest shall be primarily a demonstration of the strength of the tie between France and Great Britain, and it is earnestly hoped that the response from this country will be large and representative.

The foregoing is abbreviated from the announcements that have reached us. Mr. Bonnaire has favoured us with a call in order to answer, as far as he is able at present, some of the questions that arise. We have explained to him that we have a strong desire to assist the scheme and hearty good wishes for its success, but it was necessary to point out that much more information as to details will have to be furnished before British musical societies are likely to undertake definitely to enter for the competition. Most, if not practically all the Continental choirs qualified to enter will be male-voice choirs. It would seem probable, therefore, that if our mixed-voice and female-voice choirs elect to enter they will simply have to compete with one another as they already do in this country. Mr. Bonnaire thinks that more definite arrangements will be made when it is ascertained what choirs will enter. We are afraid that this will not suffice, for our choirs are more likely to defer entering until they are afforded exact information.

We trust that the whole business will shortly be made clearer. Meantime we trust our enterprising choirs and conductors will keep the date in mind.

The date of the competition is a good one for English choirs who would like the novelty of an economical visit to Paris. There are few competitions held at Whitsuntide that stand in the way.

We summarize the information we are able to obtain up to the time of going to press.

CHORAL, BRASS AND MILITARY BANDS.

1st.	Division of excellence	...	...	...	£400
2nd.	Superior division	...	...	...	£200
3rd.	1st division	...	...	...	£120
4th.	2nd division	...	...	...	£80
5th.	3rd division	...	...	...	£60

ORCHESTRAL AND FULL ORCHESTRAL.

The prizes offered under this and the next head compare very unfavourably with the above. But it appears that if there are any brass instruments in the orchestra (and there usually are!) entry can be made in the foregoing divisions.

1st.	Division of excellence	...	...	...	£40
2nd.	Superior division	...	...	...	£20

TRUMPETS, CORNETS, CORN DE CHASSE, DRUMS AND BUGLES.

1st.	Division of excellence	...	...	...	£32
2nd.	Superior division	...	...	...	£20

This classification is puzzling to those not used to the evolution of the competitive movement on the Continent. We confess it is not quite clear to us, but we are informed that any organization can enter for what division it chooses. But having once entered it must adhere to the division chosen, or at most may only go forward.

The French choir competition system has led to this. Each choir, &c., is classed on its record. A choir that has won cannot go down a division and 'sweep the board.' As English choirs have no such record in France they will be free to classify themselves.

This freedom may possibly result in, say, female-voice (there are very few in France), mixed-voice and male-voice choirs of all sizes from 20-voice choirs to 200 or more competing in the same section. This of course appears to be impossible. The idea, however, really is that if there are a sufficient number of entries, say eight, under each of the above classifications (female-voice, mixed-voice, male-voice,) they will only be pitted against one another and the full award assigned, £400, &c., according to division. Conceivably there may be several awards of £400 each.

(2.) There are no vocal or instrumental solo competitions.

(3.) There will be a stipulated test in each class. In addition, each choir or band will perform an own-choice piece, and will have to perform a sight-test. The own-choice pieces must not be those with which a choir or band has won in a previous competition.

(4.) The entrance list closes on February 15, 1912.

(5.) The stipulated test-pieces will not be named until after all the entries have been received (February 15).

(6.) Copies of the stipulated tests (which will all be specially written) will not be published. They will be distributed free to all the competitors after February 15.

(7.) There are entrance fees varying from £1 4s. to 8s. according to the class entered. These fees will be returned if the choir or band actually competes.

(8.) The dates given are May 25 (Saturday), May 26 (Sunday), and May 27 (Whit Monday). It is almost certain that the important competitions will be held on the Sunday, in accordance with Continental practice, and the hope is expressed that British choirs and bands will fall in with the custom. We are afraid that if this plan is adhered to many of the best choirs will not enter, at least for the chief classes. Their membership would probably be split up on this point.

We understand that M. Camille Saint-Saëns is writing one of the stipulated tests for male-voice choirs. So far we have heard nothing definite as to the other tests. Obviously it will be necessary to issue the choral tests with English words, if the scheme is to stand a chance of attracting British choirs.

We await further information. There is a good deal more to be made quite definite before our Societies will be disposed to undertake to support the scheme.

First system of the musical score. It consists of five staves. The top staff is a vocal line with lyrics: "Be Thou mer - ci -". The second staff has lyrics: "O be Thou mer - ci - ful un - to me, be Thou mer - ci -". The third staff has lyrics: "O be Thou mer - ci - ful un - to me, be Thou mer - ci -". The fourth staff has lyrics: "O be Thou mer - ci - ful un - to me, be Thou mer - ci -". The fifth staff has lyrics: "O be Thou mer - ci - ful un - to me, be Thou mer - ci - ful. . .". The music is in G major, 4/4 time. Dynamics include mf, f rit., p, and p rit..

Second system of the musical score. It consists of six staves. The top staff is a vocal line with lyrics: "ful. . . O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The second staff has lyrics: "ful. O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The third staff has lyrics: "ful. O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The fourth staff has lyrics: "ful. O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The fifth staff has lyrics: "ful. O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The sixth staff has lyrics: "ful. O Thou . . . that hear - est prayer, . .". The music is in G major, 4/4 time. Dynamics include Tempo lmo., mp ed espress., and pp.

First system of the musical score. It consists of five vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics "un - to Thee shall all flesh come, . .". The piano accompaniment begins with a cres. (crescendo) marking and features a f (forte) dynamic. The system concludes with a f dynamic marking.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The vocal parts have lyrics such as "un - to Thee . . . shall all flesh come." and "un - to Thee shall all . . flesh . . come." The piano accompaniment includes markings for pp (pianissimo), molto rall. (molto rallentando), and p (piano). The system ends with a double bar line.

There are to-day few who will dispute this verdict. Liszt's association with, and unselfish support of Wagner, was probably one of his most pregnant enthusiasms. If Liszt had been an opponent of Wagner, the course of musical development would have been disastrously retarded. In our issues for August and September, and in our present issue, the close relations of Wagner and Liszt are laid bare by Mr. Ashton Ellis's account of their Correspondence, recently published. We need not here follow Mr. Hervey in his sketch and estimate of the composer's work, because the whole subject is now being dealt with in our columns. But we can heartily recommend the book. A useful catalogue of Liszt's principal compositions and literary works, and a list of biographies and works relating to the musician, are appended, and add greatly to the value of the volume.

THE WHITEHALL ORGANS.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In answer to Dr. Flood's query as to the date of Norgate's appointment, may I say that the year 1611 is quite correctly given. It was on November 25 of that year that Edward Norgate and Andrea Bassano received a joint grant, with survivorship, of the office of tuner of his Majesty's 'virginals, organs, and other instruments.' [James I., Sign Manual, vol. i., No. 105.]

The question as to the builder of the organ of 1662 is not so easily settled. I think Dr. Flood is mistaken in concluding that the holder of the office of 'organ maker' was necessarily a master organ builder. That it was held by a practical mechanic there can be, I think, no question, but I am strongly of opinion that Father Smith was the first master-builder to receive the appointment.

It should be remembered that there was plenty of work tuning and repairing the organs in the various Royal Palaces at Whitehall, St. James's, Hampton Court, Windsor, and elsewhere, to keep a handy man well employed, and the salary of £20, together with the emoluments of the office and payment for work done, would make the post a most desirable one to such a person; but neither work nor remuneration would have been sufficient to tempt a master-builder to devote the whole of his time to the Royal Service. If Farr had been a master-builder, with a workshop and a staff of artificers, I take it as certain that he would have built many organs, and, with the prestige of the King's patronage to help him, some of these organs would have been in important buildings. How comes it, then, that out of the large number of organs which were built during the early years of the reign of Charles II., not a single one has hitherto been credited to him? Is it not incredible that the name of a craftsman of sufficient standing to be selected to build 'a fair dable organ' costing £900, for so important a building should have been completely lost, and no other work of his hands, before or since, have been chronicled?—especially when we remember that at least a dozen of Father Smith's, and about an equal number of Harris's instruments can be dated with certainty between the years 1660 and 1681?

My own explanation of the matter is that Farr received the appointment in 1660 because he seemed a capable man.

(Experts were hardly to be looked for, seeing that organs had been so long disused.) When a new organ was required, and possibly somewhat earlier, a builder of repute was called in, to wit, the young German, Bernard Smith, and the superiority of his work was so marked that thereafter he was employed to do all repairs as well. This much at least is certain, that Father Smith did most (and apparently all) of Farr's work from 1671 onwards, though Farr continued to hold the position and draw the official salary till his death in 1681. The assumption that Smith did the work (including the building of the organ) from 1662 onwards is supported by the appearance of Farr's name in the list of Charles II.'s 'Four and Twenty Fiddlers,' on November 12, 1663 ['The King's Musick,' pp. 163-4]—possibly by way of compensation for his loss of income owing to the employment of Father Smith. The fact that his name is found there only once seems to suggest that he was no greater success in that capacity than as a craftsman, so to console him for his removal from the band he was given on May 10, 1664, £30 a year for the maintenance of Michael Wise, 'late one of the children of his Majesty's Chappell Royall, whose voice is changed,' as well as certain clothing for the same youth ['The King's Musick,' pp. 167-8]. With this he had, perforce, to be content.

Yours faithfully,

ANDREW FREEMAN.

[P.S.—Since the above was in type, Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright has kindly sent me the following extract from the Declared Accounts in the Audit Office, Bundle 392, No. 65: 'Declaration of the account . . . from Mich<sup>mas</sup> 1 Chas. I. [1625] to Mich<sup>mas</sup> following. Maker, repairer & tuner—Andrea Bassano for 3 quarters of a year ending Midsummer 1626, Edward Norgate succeeding the said Andrea Bassano (by letters patent 30 Dec: 9 James I.) the first payment to begin from the death of the said Andrea Bassano.' Whether the salary was paid to Bassano on behalf of himself and Norgate, or whether Bassano kept the whole of it to himself, I should not like to say. Suffice it that both were appointed in 1611.]

CHIME TUNES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I shall be obliged if you will allow me the opportunity of asking your readers interested in old tunes, for information respecting two melodies played for many years by the chimes of the Parish Church, Wellingborough. Up to the present I have not been able to trace their origin, and as they are chime tunes of great interest I shall be grateful for any particulars respecting them.

Sir Paul Pindar (Ambassador to Turkey in 1611) gave a treble bell to the church in 1640, making a peal of six—the number of bells required for these tunes. The week-day tunes were—'Turkish March' (this seems to point to a period near to the benefactions of Sir Paul Pindar), 'How pleasant is expression,' and 'Henrietta.' I have been unable to obtain the notes of the 'Turkish March,' but here are the other two tunes:

No. 1.

['How pleasant is expression' (?). This tune is printed in Loder's 'Instruction Book for the Violin,' published nearly a century ago, with no name to it.]

No. 2.

['Henrietta' (?), popularly known as 'Old Johnny Walker,' made these chimes."]

I feel sure that these tunes must be known, as in nearly every instance when chimes were put up the tunes selected were popular ones of that particular period.

Believe me, Faithfully yours,

WILLIAM WOODING STARMER.

Warwick Park, Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, to whom we referred Mr. Starmer's letter, replies as follows:

One of the tunes you enclose is, 'How imperfect is expression':

'HOW IMPERFECT IS EXPRESSION' (FRENCH AIR).

The air is a French one, and the original words are stated to be by 'The Duke of Orleans.' A translation of the words, fitted to the original tune, was sung by Mrs. Abington in the character of Olivia in 'Twelfth Night,' at Drury Lane, in December, 1771. From this time it came to be a great favourite, and was frequently republished. The first verse begins:

How imperfect is expression

Some emotions to impart,

When we mean a soft confession,

And yet seek to hide the heart. &c., &c.

The other tune seems to be a version of a country dance melody which, under different titles, was current in the latter half of the 18th century. These titles are, 'The wedding ring,' 'Nancy's fancy,' 'The Princess Royal' (not the air generally so-called), &c.

'NANCY'S FANCY' (cir. 1780).

'THE PRINCESS ROYAL' (cir. 1790).

'THE WEDDING RING' (cir. 1800).

There is a later tune called 'Henrietta,' but it is totally unlike the above.

'The Turkish March' is probably one which is found in books of airs about 1770-80; for chimes were, of course, altered from time to time as airs got out of, or into, favour.

Sir Paul Pindar lived in 1669 'Without Bishopsgate,' and next door to Richard Mears, senior, the musical-instrument maker. Who knows whether this musical proximity had not influence in his giving the treble bell. Did Mears undertake to obtain it for the knight?

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

THE REV. ROBINSON DUCKWORTH, Sub-Dean and Canon of Westminster, who died after a brief illness on September 20. On Sunday, the 17th, he preached at St. Margaret's, Westminster, and on Monday he visited friends at Hawkhurst, in Kent, where he died as stated on the Wednesday. Canon Duckworth was always deeply interested in musical matters. He began his connection with Westminster Abbey in 1875, in which year Frederick Bridge was appointed deputy organist, James Turler the organist retaining his position only formally. It was at this period that, in co-operation with Dr. (now Sir Frederick) Bridge, his influence for good in the improvement of the music of the services at the Abbey was felt. The late Canon was made a C.V.O. in 1902. He was Chaplain to the Musicians' Company and Chaplain in Ordinary to the King. Many will recall with pleasure the admirable sermon he delivered on the occasion of the Wesley Celebration at the Abbey in 1910. His remains were cremated at Golders Green on September 22, and the casket was interred next day near to his stall in the Abbey.

MR. H. R. ROSE suddenly, from heart failure, at his residence at Bedford, on September 5. He was born in 1854, and was thus fifty-seven years of age. Mr. Rose was educated at Bedford Grammar School. In 1876 he became organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's Church, Bedford, and later he was organist at Regent's Park Church. He succeeded the late Henry Smart as organist of St. Pancras Church, a post he held for twenty-five years until his resignation owing to failing health. He was a Fellow and a Professor of the Royal Academy of Music. In 1880 he married Miss Clara Samuëll, the well-known soprano. He leaves two children, one of whom (Miss Nina Rose) is a promising pupil at the Royal Academy of Music. Mr. Rose, who was a Freemason, was Grand Organist of the Grand Lodge of England, and also Provincial Grand Organist, 1896-10.

THE REV. MARCUS HAST, aged seventy-two. He was well-known as the chief cantor of the Great Synagogue, Duke Street, a post which he had held since 1871. He was also a composer. His works include 'The fall of Jerusalem' and 'The death of Moses.'

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

SEPTEMBER 10 AND 12 TO 15.

The 188th meeting of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Hereford and Gloucester was held at Worcester on the above dates. It may be stated at once that at no previous Festival has there been presented a programme of greater variety and general interest. On these occasions local gentry form the bulk of the audience, and considerations of finance are factors in the choice of music and artists. In view of all the circumstances, we think no one will seriously question the wisdom of the framers of the programmes presented on this occasion. The old and the new, the familiar and the unfamiliar, were blended in fair proportion, and musical amateurs of all shades of taste could find much to enjoy.

The choir consisted of 63 lady sopranos and 24 boy choristers, 54 lady contraltos and 13 male altos, 56 tenors and 65 basses—total, 275. It was a fully competent body, the tone being always musical, even in the strongest climaxes. There were few lapses from good intonation, and although the whole body was not completely unified (we must bear in mind that the choir is recruited from three centres) in attack, the execution was almost invariably fluent and sympathetic. The superintendent of the chorus was Mr. A. E. Bibbs.

The orchestra of 97 performers (selected mainly from the London Symphony Orchestra) consisted of fourteen 1st violins (principal Mr. W. H. Reed), twelve 2nd violins (Mr. W. H. Eayres), ten violas (Mr. A. Hobday), eight violoncellos (Mr. W. H. Squire), nine double-basses (Mr. E. A. Carrodus), eight flutes and a piccolo, eight oboes (the extras being required for the 'St. Matthew' Passion), an 'English horn,' four clarinets, five bassoons, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones and tuba, kettledrums, &c., and two harps.

The principal singers (arranged, for safety, in alphabetical order) were: Sopranos: Madame Le Mar, Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Gleeson-White; Contraltos: Miss Alice Lakin, Miss Phyllis Lett, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Sara Silvers; Tenors: Mr. John Coates, Mr. Gervase Elwes; Baritones and Basses: Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. William Higley, Mr. Campbell McInnes, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Frederick Ranalow.

Herr Fritz Kreisler was solo violinist, Dr. A. H. Brewer (Gloucester), was organist at morning performances, Dr. G. R. Sinclair (Hereford) taking all the evening performances and the pianoforte part of the recitatives in the Bach Passion music. Mr. A. E. Brent Smith was the organist at the opening service.

Mr. Ivor Atkins (Worcester) was the general conductor, Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. Granville Bantock, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, Dr. Brewer and Mr. W. H. Reed conducting their own compositions. Mr. Atkins added greatly to his reputation as a firm, sound conductor.

The proceedings commenced as usual with an opening service in the Cathedral on Sunday afternoon (September 10) in which the full choir and orchestra took part. The following music was performed:

Symphony in C minor ... .. Brahms.
(Last two movements.)

Psalms 46 and 150—Chant ... .. G. R. Sinclair.
Magnificat in A, and Nunc dimittis in D Ivor Atkins.
Anthem—'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' Brahms.
Hymn—'Eternal God' (Lasst uns erfreuen) ...
Kaisermarsch ... .. Wagner.
Organ Voluntary—Toccata and Fugue in D (Doric) Bach.

A sermon was preached by the Very Rev. The Dean of Salisbury.

The next day (Monday, September 11) was devoted to long and strenuous rehearsal, and on Tuesday morning Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed in the Cathedral. This oratorio has been a feature of every Three Choirs Festival since 1847, with the exception of those held at Hereford in 1852 and Worcester in 1875. The fact that the attendance this year was less than usual was not without significance. One reason is that so many other opportunities are afforded of hearing the work elsewhere than at a festival. The performance was a very satisfactory if not brilliant one. The principal soloists were Madame Nicholls, Madame Kirby Lunn, Mr. Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin. The part of the Youth was well sung by B. A. Watt, a Hereford chorister.

The evening concert on September 12 was also held in the Cathedral. The programme included three works by English composers, the most novel of which was one by Dr. H. Walford Davies entitled 'Five sayings of Jesus, together with a reputed saying (from the Gospel of St. Peter) of His, and certain other words chiefly derived from the "Imitation of Christ" by Thomas à Kempis.' The setting is a continuous one, and occupies about ten minutes in performance. It is written for tenor solo, chorus and orchestra, the choir, except in one instance, uttering the Sayings, and the soloist commenting. An instrumental prelude, at once solemn and beautiful, induces a receptive mood for the first Saying, which is a smooth passage of simple monorhythmic four-part harmony. It merges into a short tenor solo which ends with a climax of some intensity. A few more bars of chorus follow, and overlap another solo in which the musical interest is found in the agitated figures of the accompaniment. At the words 'How can it be called a life that begetteth so many, many deaths and plagues' the music rises to great passion, which is immediately quelled by the thought 'And yet,—it is the object of men's love.' A longer passage of chorus ensues, and here the composer's power to express strong feeling is finely exemplified. The words 'Love one another even as I have loved you' return to the tranquil mood, and a not very attractive tenor solo with an arpeggio figure of accompaniment follows. The final sixteen bars of chorus are a welcome repetition of the opening choral movement. On the whole, the music is a highly characteristic example of Dr. Davies's intimate and introspective style. Some would say that it is in part suggested by passages in the 'Dream of Gerontius,' but we are more inclined to believe that its idiom is quite self-evolved and natural to the composer. Mr. Gervase Elwes sang the solo part with much feeling.

Another work not previously heard except at the recent great function was Sir Hubert Parry's 'Coronation Te Deum,' for soli, chorus and orchestra. It was more effective on this occasion than it was at the Coronation. The work exhibits the composer's facility as a contrapuntist, and his skill to contrive powerful climaxes and picturesque effects. As at the Coronation Service, the middle movement or Sanctus was found especially attractive. Other features of the imposing work are described in another part of our present issue (p. 656). The performance was a very good one, but the quality of the singing in the quartet was in inverse ratio to the reputation of the soloists. Elgar's unaccompanied motet for six voices, 'Go, song of mine' (Op. 57), was another interesting item. Its effect naturally varied in relation to the experience of the listener. The few present who were familiar with its extraordinary depths of expressiveness as revealed by small northern choirs who have specialised its study, felt something lacking; but the performance, although not fully significant, impressed others to whom the potentialities of the piece were not familiar. An excellent performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony closed the concert. Mr. Atkins's tempi were inclined to be fast, but not unduly so.

On Wednesday morning the programme was of exceptional interest. It says much for the breadth of view of the Cathedral dignitaries that they were willing to allow the third act of Wagner's 'Parsifal' to be given in the Cathedral. There is the excuse that the work can with justice be described (as it was in the programme-book) as a sacred Festival-drama, and that the action is not more dramatic than that of some oratorios; but nevertheless the stage and its environment are inevitably suggested, and, it may be added, demanded. There is so much in this act that appeals to the eye rather than to the ear, that it is very doubtful whether the majority of the audience on this occasion could find more in the instrumental sections than a stream of not particularly interesting sound. But the elevation of the music to some of the more intelligible dialogue was unmistakable, and in any case it was a gratification to many present to feel that they have had some acquaintance with a work of world-wide reputation. The principals were Mr. Robert Radford (Gurnemanz), Mr. John Coates (Parsifal), and Mr. William Higley (Amfortas), who were all highly competent exponents of their often very difficult parts. Mr. Radford's sonorous voice told admirably in the Cathedral. Mr. Atkins showed his knowledge of the score and his ability as a conductor. The band played with great beauty of tone, the wood-wind especially excelling.

'Parsifal' was followed by Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' a work for which Wagner himself had admiration, and which in 1848 he arranged for performance at Dresden.* The edition used at Worcester was that so carefully edited by Mr. Barclay Squire, who has followed the tradition of the Papal choir. The eight parts of the work are generally divided into semi-chorus and full chorus, but sometimes the semi-chorus is antiphonal double-chorus and sometimes the full chorus is in eight parts. Eight soloists sang the semi-chorus on this occasion, and they performed their part with welcome beauty of tone and chaste expression. The full chorus also sang steadily and with fine tone. The pitch fell, but it did not seriously mar the effect. The music is amazingly interesting; it is so dignified, massive and obviously beautiful. Its well 'voiced' chords were a delight to the ear, especially within the walls of a cathedral. The programme concluded with a performance of Elgar's new Symphony in E flat, under the direction of the composer. It was a fine interpretation that brought out many new beauties to those of the audience who had previous acquaintance with the work. The music is now familiar to our orchestral players, and the composer was therefore able to give all his mind to interpretation. The mellowing effect of the resonance in the Cathedral was an added charm, creating a beautiful blend of brass, wood, and strings. The Symphony is still received with some dubiety by a few critics, but every fresh performance adds to its appreciation. To us it seems to include some of the most beautiful music Elgar has ever composed. There are whole sections in the first movement alone that are nowhere excelled in sheer beauty in any other of his works. He is never more attractive to some of his hearers than when he is brooding quietly over his themes. Yet these are the characteristic passages that others are disposed almost to ignore. Our belief is strong that the Symphony has a great future.

At the evening concert, given on September 13 in the Public Hall, a very varied programme was presented. Stanford's Irish Rhapsody No. 2, in F minor (Op. 84), was an effective introduction much appreciated by the audience, who also greatly applauded Mr. John Coates's admirable performance of Dr. Brewer's three Pastorals, 'An Idyll,' 'Amongst the willows,' and 'The Morris dance.' The composer seems to have some infatuation for topics of this kind, and he certainly writes con amore. A new 'Overture to a Greek Tragedy,' by Granville Bantock, was a very important novelty. The tragedy shadowed in the overture is stated to be that of (Edipus at Colonus (Sophocles), but no detailed clue to the music was afforded by the composer. The work as music is generally ominous, austere and, as befits its theme, suggestive of fearful and solemn thoughts. The climaxes are so full of strenuous sound, that it is difficult, at least for ordinary listeners, to resolve them into music; but one feels that they represent a mood. Probably their keenness was over-accentuated at Worcester by the acoustic properties of the small hall. Orchestration of this powerful kind demands a more appropriate arena. The themes are undoubtedly striking, and they are employed with skill. The Coda is a fine one, and the whole work exhibits a consistency of style and treatment that binds it into a unity. Doubtless it will be heard at many of our coming orchestral concerts. Another practically new work produced at this concert was Elgar's March, composed for the recent Coronation. The work made a considerable effect in Westminster Abbey. It is written almost on symphonic lines, and gives the impression of breadth and dignity. As with Professor Bantock's work, the orchestration was in the Worcester hall almost deafening. It was sometimes perfectly impossible to hear the music because of the sound. But it was clear that the composition has great brilliancy in its subject-matter and its treatment. A new work that gave abundant pleasure to the audience was a set of Variations for strings by Mr. Reed, the leader of the band. The theme is an original one of a not particularly striking character, but that it lent itself to effective treatment was proved by the attractive variations skillfully woven round it by the composer. It goes without saying that the music is thoroughly well adapted to strings. A Scherzo capriccioso and a Cavatina treatment were amongst the best numbers. Altogether the composition is a notable addition to the repertoire of stringed orchestras. Other items in the programme were two of Elgar's 'Sea-songs,' which were well sung by Miss Phyllis Lett, and Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody' No. 1, in F.

Great interest was felt in the performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music, which was given on Thursday morning. At any time this great composition would draw an audience to a Three Choirs Festival, but on the present occasion there was the additional attraction of the first performance of the new edition of the work as edited by Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Ivor Atkins. It was known that Mr. Atkins, who conducted, had made a special study of the oratorio with a view to this performance, and therefore much was expected. We are unable to go into details. It must suffice to record that while the interpretation had due warmth and colour, it never exhibited the vice of exaggeration in the climaxes. The first part especially was grateful to the ear and the mind because of its dignified restraint. The ejaculations of the second choir in the first chorus were delivered firmly and significantly without that startling burst of tone that distinguished a celebrated performance of the work elsewhere. The new words to the recitatives were very acceptable, and seemed grateful to the singers. Whether it was wise—in Worcester Cathedral—to employ the pianoforte as an accompaniment to recitatives is open to doubt, even if the practice may have been intended by Bach. In our seat it was difficult to hear at all the delicate playing of Dr. Sinclair. The orchestral accompaniments were played with affecting purity of tone and style by the accomplished performers of the orchestra, and Herr Kreiser's playing of the violin obligato to the solo, 'Have mercy,' was one of those perfect things rarely heard. All of the choruses were sung well, and some were very finely done, and the chorales made a great effect. The principal soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Gervase Elwes (Evangelist), Mr. Campbell McInnes (Christus), Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. Elwes and Mr. McInnes sang with moving expression. We do not recall finer interpretations of their parts. On the whole the performance was one that left listeners in an elevated mood.

A notable feature of the proceedings on the day on which Bach's 'Passion' music was given, was the performance on the tower of the Cathedral of two chorales, 'O Mensch' and 'O Haupt voll Blut,' from the oratorio, by the brass section of the orchestra (trumpets, trombones, horns and tuba). Sir Edward Elgar scored the music, and Mr. Ivor Atkins and Professor Sanford Terry, of Aberdeen, conducted. Each chorale was played four times, once from each corner of the tower. The idea was an excellent one, if only that it appealed to the whole populace. Musically it was successful, and sentimentally still more so. On the tower itself the effect was in the highest degree impressive.

The programme of the evening performance in the Cathedral consisted of 'Five mystical songs' for baritone solo and chorus (ad lib.) by Dr. Vaughan Williams, which were performed for the first time, Elgar's Violin concerto, and Mozart's Requiem Mass. It was stated in the programme book that Dr. Williams's setting of the 'Mystical songs' had occupied him at odd times during the last five years, but that they had recently undergone considerable revision, and the third was written only this year. The words are said to be 'after' the poems of George Herbert. They breathe consolation, and at times joyfulness. The music is a combination of old and new idioms, some modal tonality imparting a certain quaintness and naive simplicity that had a distinct charm. The composer is well-known to have a close acquaintance with English Folk-song, and the peculiarities of this mode of musical expression, indefinite though they may be, seem to have permeated his style. The songs are for baritone solo—very sympathetically sung by Mr. J. Campbell McInnes—and four of them have an ad libitum chorus in which the singers are directed to murmur with open lips on the sound of the short u in 'but.' The effect was interesting, inasmuch as it provided a tone-colour differentiated from the orchestra and the usual church tone. On the whole, the series of songs made an impressive effect.

* This was not published until 1877.

The solo in the Violin concerto was played by Herr Kreisler in his best style, and the composer conducted. The orchestral effects were better blended than we have previously heard them, and the performance deepened the impression that the work is one of exceptional beauty. The Requiem was carefully performed. There were no very striking effects in the choral climaxes, but the execution was always fluent and agreeable. One could always yield oneself to the flow of the music without feeling concern as to any likelihood of uncertainties. And what fine music it is! Yet it fails to move strongly. The soloists were Madame Le Mar, Miss Lakin, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Ranalow.

On the Friday morning (September 15) a performance of 'The Messiah' was given. The soloists were Madame Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Elwes, and Mr. Radford. The attendance was not nearly so large as it was at the performance of the oratorio at previous Festivals.

The Festival was brought to a conclusion in the Cathedral by an evening service. Garrett's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, Mr. Ivor Atkins's 'Abide with me,' and S. S. Wesley's 'Thou wilt keep him,' were used.

Among the distinguished visitors to the Festival were the Princess Henry of Battenberg and Prince Leopold, who were guests of Earl and Countess Beauchamp, at Madresfield, near Worcester, and King Manuel and his mother, Queen Amelia, who were staying at Wood Norton.

The programme books used throughout the Festival were written by Mr. Herbert Thompson, and they displayed that critic's skill in giving necessary information in a terse and agreeable style.

MR. J. W. RENDLE.

Mr. J. W. Rendle (violinist) can claim the longest record as a member of the Three Choirs Festival Orchestra. He was born at Exeter in 1840, and studied under his father, and Blagrove. He first played in the orchestra at a Festival in 1860, and has not missed a Festival since that date. On July 11, 1851, he received a command to perform before Queen Victoria and other members of the Royal family, at Buckingham Palace.

THE COMING SEASON.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

The following particulars of series of orchestral concerts in London are announced:

The Philharmonic Society—The seven concerts of the season will be given as follows: November 7 (Herr Mengelberg); November 28 (Sir Charles Stanford); December 5 (Herr Safonoff); February 8 (Sir Edward Elgar); February 22 (Mr. Landon Ronald); March 21 (Sir A. C. Mackenzie); May 23 (Herr Nikisch). Further information is given on p. 646.

Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts—These concerts will be given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry J. Wood on October 21, November 4, November 18, December 2, January 20, February 3, February 17 and March 2. The chief new work produced will be a Symphony by Dr. Walford Davies.

The Promenade Concerts—This series, now in progress at the Queen's Hall, will continue on every week-night until October 21. Sir Henry J. Wood is the conductor.

The Sunday Concert Society—Concerts will be given at the Queen's Hall by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry J. Wood, every Sunday from September 24 to March 17 (twenty-six concerts).

Miss Gwynne Kimpton's Orchestral Concerts for Young People—The second series will be again held at Steinway Hall and will take place on October 14, November 11, December 9, January 27, February 24 and March 9.

CHORAL CONCERTS.

The following works have been chosen for performance by London and Suburban Choral Societies:

Royal Choral Society (conductor Sir Frederick Bridge)—Elijah; The Golden Legend; The Messiah; The St. Matthew Passion; The Dream of Gerontius; Scenes from Parsifal.

London Choral Society (conductor Mr. Arthur Fagge)—The Dream of Gerontius; A tale of old Japan (Coleridge-Taylor) (first performance); The Soul of Percival (Charlton Speer); Recessional (Margaret Meredith); The Fir Tree and the Brook (Bertram Shapleigh) (first performance); Alto Rhapsody (Brahms); Mass in F (Bach); Mass in D (Beethoven).

Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. Allen Gill)—Elijah; Hiawatha; Israel in Egypt; Messiah; King Olaf; Dream of Gerontius; Martyr of Antioch; Faust.

The Bach Choir (conductor Dr. H. P. Allen)—The Beattitudes (César Franck); The St. John Passion.

The Edward Mason Choir (conductor Mr. Edward Mason)—Young Lochinvar (Haydn Wood); Sunset (Edgar L. Bainton); Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda (von Holst).

Central London Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. David J. Thomas)—St. John's Eve; Gounod's Faust.

Brixton Oratorio Choir (conductor Mr. Douglas Redman; organist Mr. Welton Hickin)—St. Paul; Hear my Prayer; As the Hart Pants; Hymn of Praise; Gallia (Gounod); The Creation; The Rose of Sharon; Rossini's Stabat Mater; Messiah.

Munro Davison's Choral Society—Advent Hymn (Schumann); The Black Knight; Choral fantasia on Wagner's 'The Mastersingers' (Fletcher); The Sorcerer (Sullivan).

Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union (conductor Dr. J. E. Borland)—Judas Maccabæus; St. Matthew Passion; Hymn of Praise; A Song of the English (Bridge).

Bromley Choral Society (conductor Mr. Frederic Fertel)—Hiawatha, Parts I. and II.; Merrie England; Messiah.

Buckhurst Hill Choral Society (conductor Mr. Otley Marshall)—Look at the Clock (Hubert Bath); Sands of Dee (Charles Harris); The Vagabonds (Eaton Fanning); For Empire and for King (Fletcher).

- West London* (conductor Mr. W. T. Oke)—Hiawatha, Part II.; Israel in Egypt. Six part-songs, &c.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The two novelties that first call for notice possess much in common. They are both national Rhapsodies, the one being 'Roumanian,' written by M. Georges Enesco, the other being 'Swedish,' written by M. Hugo Alfvén under the subtitle of 'Midsommarvaka.' Both are based on tunes that are traditional or modelled according to the traditional type, and both composers aim at heightening the characteristics of their melodies by decorative treatment instead of disguising them by symphonic treatment. The result is perfect congruity between method and matter. Folk-tunes and tunes having their ingenious character rarely undergo 'symphonizing' with success. In many cases there is conflict between an unsophisticated theme and sophisticated development, but also between the hint of 'programme' conveyed in the tune and the denial of it conveyed in the treatment on absolute lines. Both the Rhapsodies under consideration avoided that error. That of M. Enesco was the more immediately appealing, for its melodies had more intrinsic merit and its style of expression was freer. The composer is a highly original and masterly writer for the orchestra. Some of his ideas were daring in the extreme, but however experimental, they were successful and captivating. M. Alfvén's work fell a little short of the other in the worth of its material and in inventiveness, but doubtless carried out well its programme of illustrating the festive preparations made in Sweden for Midsummer-day. In spite of proverbial odium, comparison is provoked by the close juxtaposition of the two works, which were performed on August 29 and August 31 respectively.

The concert on September 6 provided a little British triumph in the fine reception accorded to Mr. Balfour Gardiner's new 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance,' and the consequent encore. Shepherd Fennel is a character in Hardy's Wessex tale 'The three strangers' and his dance took place in a cottage with a fiddle and a 'serpent' as the band. The scene, the district, and the event are admirably depicted in Mr. Gardiner's music, which is of captivating piquancy and all the more telling because of its restraint. The work does not call for much description or comment; it is short and simple; lively on the whole, with a more subdued middle section; and delicately scored. It will doubtless be heard again soon.

Three pieces for oboe and orchestra, by Mr. Hamilton Harty, introduced on September 7, with Mr. Henri de Busscher as soloist, were light and pretty, as musically as all Mr. Harty's work, and bore out their titles—'Orientale,' 'Chansonette,' and 'A la campagne' in a refined manner.

On September 14, Mr. Norman O'Neill received a well-deserved ovation after the first performance of his 'Variations on an Irish Air (Op. 29).' The work was remarkable for its technical power and wealth of detail. One could wish that in many places the composer had made a more restrained use of his fluent conception of devices of treatment and orchestration; but the work as a whole is one of high aims and high achievement. It compared well with 'The flute of Pan,' a Suite for flute and orchestra, by M. Jules Mouquet, that was introduced on this occasion with Mr. Albert Fransella as soloist.

Among the most successful of the soloists appearing for the first time at these concerts were Miss Ivy Parkin (pianist), Miss Myra Dixon (vocalist), Mr. George Rathbone (pianist), who played MacDowell's first Concerto.

The 'Aria et Varia,' for carillon, by W. W. Starmers, which was played with such great success by M. Josef Denyn at the close of the International Concours de Carillonneurs (1910), at Malines, was again played there by M. Jules van de Plas on September 12, and most enthusiastically received by a very large audience.

'THE VEIL' IN LONDON AND THE PROVINCES.

After a long delay, caused in the main by the composer's unfortunate illness, Sir Frederic Cowen's cantata, 'The Veil,' which created a deep impression when produced at the last Cardiff Festival, is at length to be heard in London. The performance will take place under the composer's direction at Queen's Hall, on October 31. The Cardiff Festival Choir will supply the choral body, and the full London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged. The soloists will be Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly and Mr. Herbert Brown.

Other performances have been arranged as follows: Liverpool, November 7; Cardiff, November 29; Newcastle-on-Tyne, November 29; Bath, December 5; Sheffield, December 12; Bradford, March 1; Aberdeen, in March.

KNELLER HALL.

A popular outdoor concert was given at the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, on August 30, by the band of 160 performers, under the guidance of various student-conductors. The programme contained such numbers as Fucik's 'Entry of the gladiators,' Myddleton's sketch, 'Ireland for ever,' light operatic selections, and as a grand finale, Eckersberg's Fantasia 'The battle of Waterloo.' The fine tone of the band and the discipline it displayed under varying conditions were a strong tribute to the work of the School. The concert was given under the guidance of Major A. J. Stretton, M.V.O., Director of the School.

During Major Stretton's absence in India his work as Director will be undertaken by student C. E. Richardson, who has been awarded the silver medal presented annually by the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and has been appointed bandmaster to the 2nd Batt. King's Own Regiment.

THE DERBYSHIRE CHOIR.

The 2,000 voices of this organization were brought together at the Crystal Palace on September 16, and carried out the following programme under the direction of Mr. T. H. Bennett:

'Fear not, O land' ... ..	Goss
'Let their celestial concerts' ... ..	Handel
'Moonlight' ... ..	Eaton Fanning
'We love our Island story' ... ..	Eaton Fanning
'Hail, bright abode' ... ..	Wagner
'Hymn to Music' ... ..	Dudley Buck
'As torrents in summer' ... ..	Elgar
'The Englishman' ... ..	Smith
'Rule, Britannia' ... ..	Arne

The Choir was heard at its best in music of a simple design and calling for natural expression, rather than in music that required a high state of choral discipline. Circumstances acted against any display of striking executive powers, and the results obtained in the face of this difficulty were highly creditable. The aggregate vocal tone was of noteworthy purity, brightness and strength. Mr. J. Frederick Staton acted as deputy conductor, Mr. Norman Hibberd was the organist, and vocal solos were given by Mr. Ernest Neale.

BACH FESTIVAL AT EISENACH.

At the Biennial Festival held at Duisburg last year (see Musical Times for July, 1910) it was agreed to give an occasional extra Festival on a smaller scale. The first of these was arranged for September 23 and 24, to take place at Eisenach, Bach's birthplace. Three concerts were announced: one in St. George's Church and two in the Fürstenhof. Among the items were compositions by Bach's uncle, J. Christoph Bach, Johannes Eccard (1553-1611), J. H. Schein (1586-1630), Bach's son Emanuel, H. L. Hassler, and Corelli. The selections from Bach's own works included the little-known Cantata No. 158, 'Der Friede sei mit dir,' for soprano and bass soloists, with concluding chorale; the motet for double-chorus 'The Spirit also helpeth us'; the second 'Brandenburg' Concerto; the Wedding cantata for soprano and strings 'Weichet nur,' and smaller solos. The question of 'harpischord or pianoforte' was to be ventilated practically. Madame Landowska was to play the programme-capriccio on the former instrument, then Herr Georg Schumann on the latter; the same experiment was to be tried with the 'Chromatic Fantasia.'

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The summer season's concerts in Birmingham were restricted to a series of vocal and instrumental entertainments given in the Floral Hall of the Edgbaston Botanical Gardens under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction, the last concert of the season taking place on September 2, at which Mr. Claude Crossley's clever girl pianists from Sheffield were heard in a number of duets for two pianofortes, and some well-selected pianoforte solos. On this occasion also a remarkably gifted boy violinist, Master Paul Beard, the son of a well-known viola-player of this city, created a great sensation by his wonderful executive skill and musicianship. He can scarcely be more than nine or ten years of age.

Preparations for the coming musical season are now completed, and there are likely to be more concerts than ever, orchestral and choral music being especially well provided for. The Birmingham Festival Choral Society, so ably conducted by Dr. Sinclair, issued an admirable scheme which is likely to appeal to all lovers of choral music, containing as it does Bach's monumental B minor Mass, Beethoven's 'Choral symphony,' Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' Coleridge-Taylor's new work 'A tale of old Japan,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and the customary Christmas performance of 'The Messiah.'

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association's programmes are of distinctly popular character, and will include a concert recital of Edward German's opera 'Merrie England,' and Gounod's 'Faust,' Elgar's suite 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' 'The Messiah,' Joseph H. Adams's cantata 'King Conor,' and miscellaneous items.

The Midland Musical Society propose giving Sir Arthur Sullivan's always-welcome 'Golden Legend,' Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' Brahms's 'German Requiem,' and one of Bach's sacred cantatas.

The Birmingham Choral Union have arranged popular performances of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' cycle, and Thomas Facer's cantata 'Maid of Lorn.' These will form the chief items of interest.

Orchestral music will chiefly rest with the Birmingham Philharmonic Society, who intend giving eight orchestral concerts during the season, all of which will be conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham. The provisional programme contains several novelties, chief among these being Sir Edward Elgar's Second Symphony. The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra will give four popular orchestral concerts, probably conducted by Mr. Julian Clifford, of Harrogate.

Of special interest will be the four Chamber concerts which Messrs. Dale & Forty intend giving at the Queen's College with the 'Arthur Catterall String Quartette.' The programmes will comprise quartets by Beethoven, Mozart, Strauss, Debussy, Schumann, and Tchaikovsky. The 'Harrison' Concerts will again be inaugurated with the appearance of Madame Tetrassini. Orchestral music will be one of the chief attractions of these concerts, inasmuch as the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, and the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, are sure to provide admirable orchestral programmes. Of real interest will be the concert to be given by Herr Fritz Kreisler, Mr. Harold Bauer, and Señor Casals—a perfect trio of artists. Messrs. Murdoch have also arranged for the re-appearance here of Monsieur Ysaye and Monsieur Raoul Pugno, to give a violin and pianoforte recital. The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées in connection with the Autumn Exhibition of Pictures will be carried on as usual under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction. The Quinlan Opera Company will give a fortnight's operatic season at the newly-reconstructed Prince of Wales's Theatre. The repertory is an extensive one, and will include Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Valkyrie,' and 'Tristan und Isolde,' Offenbach's 'Tales of Hoffmann' and 'Humperdinck's' 'Hänsel und Gretel' will again be welcome. Puccini's 'The girl of the Golden West' will probably find a place in the repertory. In addition to all these fixtures there will be a number of concerts promoted by local artists.

BRISTOL.

The different musical societies have commenced their practices for the season, and the following are the works which they have taken in hand:

Bristol Choral Society (conductor, Mr. George Riseley)—'Faust' (Berlioz); 'Israel in Egypt' (Handel), with the Bath Choral Society; and 'The Messiah.'

Bristol Musical Society (conductor, Mr. C. W. Stear)—'Carmen' (Bizet), and 'The Golden Legend' (Sullivan).

Bristol New Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Arnold Barter)—'Christmas Oratorio,' Parts I. and II. (Bach); 'The first Walpurgis Night' (Mendelssohn); 'The Blessed Damsel' (Debussy); 'Songs of the Fleet' (Stanford); and 'Blest pair of Sirens' (Parry).

West Bristol Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Charles Read)—'Fair Ellen' (Max Bruch); 'Bon Bon Choral Suite' (Coleridge-Taylor); and 'Judas Maccabeus' (Handel).

Clifton Choral Society (conductor, Mr. A. Ernest Hill)—'Mary Stuart' (J. L. Roedel), 'Song of the Vikings' (Eaton Fanning); and 'Praise to the Holiest' (Edwards).

Messrs. J. S. Fry & Sons' Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Charles Read)—'St. Cecilia' (Benedict), and 'Last Minstrel' (Hamish MacCunn).

Bristol Dolphin Male-Voice Choir (conductor, Mr. F. H. Simpson)—Part-songs and glees.

On September 13, the new organ at the Free Methodist Church, Harrowdene Road, Knowle, was opened, and there was a large audience. Mr. George Riseley gave a recital on the instrument with his accustomed ability, and the choir sang Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer' (Miss Ethel Harris, soloist). There were solos by Miss Harris and Miss Lena Stone.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

THE THREE TOWNS.

Plymouth's position as the largest town in a corner of the country with considerable distance from the metropolis has hindered her enterprise and development in the musical art, and gradually it has come to be recognised that she occupies too isolated a position to be included in the schemes of provincial tours undertaken by London artists. Therefore the visits of such to Plymouth are now very few, and have become so, it must regrettably be confessed, through lack of support, the standard of musical art having fallen lamentably low. With a desire to broaden the musical life of the West by bringing Plymouth more in touch with larger centres the Misses Smith, who for many years have accomplished much in chamber music, have with a pluck and generosity which deserves reward, enlarged their usual scheme to include appearances of artists who will supply stimulus and artistic benefit to local endeavour. They promise four chamber concerts during the season, at each of which will be heard a vocalist or instrumentalist from the outside world in addition to their own instrumental quartet. The first concert is announced for October 25.

Mr. R. G. Evans is announcing his second series of Symphony concerts, to include five, with probably an additional event in the New Year of festival proportions. Dr. Weekes's Orchestral Society announces two concerts for the season, including Symphonies by Gade and Dvorák and Concertos for viola and organ respectively. Mr. J. W. Newton will continue his Symphony concerts at Stonehouse.

Mr. H. Moreton, conductor of the Guildhall Choral Society, has promised performances of Berlioz's 'Faust,' 'The Messiah' and 'The Dream of Gerontius' as his 1911-12 programme, and Dr. Weekes's Choral Society have Handel's 'Samson' in rehearsal. The Emmanuel Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Reginald Waddy, has existed solely for the performance of sacred music, but has now resolved to widen its aim to include secular works, and intends to give a concert of part-songs, madrigals, &c., early in the season.

DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

On August 18 and 19, Axe Vale Musical Society gave good performances of 'Pirates of Penzance,' with choir and orchestra of over sixty performers. Mr. W. C. Walton conducted, and Miss Bradbury Turner stage-managed.

Bampton Musical Society will be revived this season, with Mr. J. G. Coren as conductor. Torquay Amateur Operatic Society has selected 'The Rose of Persia' for the next series of performances. With every augury for success the Paignton Choral Society has drawn up a good programme for the season, including the 'Hiawatha' trilogy for autumn performance, and Bach's Magnificat to be given during Lent. Mr. Wilfrid Layton is the conductor.

CORNWALL.

A choral society of about forty members has been formed for Gunnislake and district, with Rev. W. W. Bickford as conductor and Miss L. Sims as accompanist. On September 17, Camborne Centenary Choir, conducted by Mr. J. H. Tellam, gave a concert of part-songs, solos and choruses.

GLASGOW.

The Scottish National Exhibition has provided a kind of secondary musical season, lasting from May till October. Apart from the usual military and other band performances and organ recitals, some excellent choral concerts have been given by the Choral Union, the Bach Choir, the Orpheus Choir, and other local choirs. A notable event in the Exhibition music was the highly successful inauguration of the Competitive Festival Movement during Coronation week.

The Choral and Orchestral Union's scheme for the coming season presents no new features. On the choral side the works selected for performance are the first and third Acts of 'Lohengrin,' Elgar's 'Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands,' the Easter Scene from 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' Beethoven's Choral Symphony, 'Elijah,' and 'The Messiah.' Mr. Emil Mlynarski will be conductor-in-chief, but 'Elijah' and 'The Messiah' will be under the direction of Mr. Henri Verbruggen, who has succeeded Dr. Coward in the conductorship of the Choral Union. Messrs. Paterson, Sons & Co. announce a series of recitals to be given by Madame Carreño, Miss Jean Waterston, and others. For his Chamber Concerts Mr. A. M. Henderson has secured the co-operation of the Brussels Quartet and Mr. George Henschel as vocalist.

Herr E. Denhof has issued the preliminary prospectus of his opera scheme. The works to be presented are 'Elektra,' 'Orpheus,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' and 'The Flying Dutchman.'

Pollokshields Philharmonic Society (Mr. John Cullen, conductor) have in hand Elgar's 'Caractacus.' The Bach Choir (Mr. J. M. Diack, conductor) will perform the 'Christmas Oratorio,' the 'Easter Oratorio,' 'Christ lay in death's dark prison,' and the secular cantata 'Phœbus and Pan.' In addition there will be some chamber concerts and lecture-recitals in which Mr. Fuller Maitland and Mr. R. F. McEwen will take part. The formation of a new choir composed of employees of the North British Locomotive Works is the direct outcome of the Competitive Festival. As separate choirs the male and the female sections competed successfully, and they now unite in forming a mixed-voice choir of about 100 voices, under the conductorship of Mr. B. W. Hartley.

Other prospective programmes are: Western Choral Union, Mendelssohn's 'Lobgesang,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast'; Glasgow Operatic Society, André Messager's 'Véronique'; Ayr Choral Union, Mendelssohn's 'Lobgesang,' the finale from Beethoven's 'Fidelio,' and miscellaneous part-songs; Stirling Choral Union, 'The Mikado,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Requiem for chorus and strings by Cornelius, and part-songs. These four Societies are conducted by Mr. Wilfrid E. Senior. The Young Men's Christian Association Choir (Mr. R. L. Reid, conductor), will perform Wallace's 'Maritana' and 'The Messiah'; Cambuslang Choral Society (Mr. J. M. Diack, conductor), an operatic programme with orchestral accompaniment, Stanford's 'Phaëdra Crohoore,' and miscellaneous pieces; Western Amateur Orchestra (Mr. John Macgarratt, conductor), Beethoven's second Symphony, the 'Prometheus' overture, Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite, 'Snegourochka,' and Mackenzie's 'Khapsodie Ecosaise, No. 1'; Paisley Philharmonic Society (Mr. John Macgarratt, conductor), Mendelssohn's Symphony, No. 1, in C minor, Saint-Saëns's Suite in D, Mozart's overture, 'Così fan tutte,' and some smaller numbers by Russian composers.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The seventy-third season of the Philharmonic Society, which now adds the word 'Limited' to its official title, opens on October 10. The choral rehearsals commenced on September 4, the works upon which the singers are engaged including Sir Frederic Cowen's 'The Veil,' Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'A tale of old Japan,' and Debussy's 'Blessed Damsel'; in addition to unaccompanied part-songs, in which the Philharmonic choir are usually at their best—albeit the opportunities are too infrequent. The instrumental novelties include Rachmaninoff's third Pianoforte concerto and Symphony in E minor, which the composer will respectively play and conduct on October 24. Mr. William Wallace's Symphonic Poem 'Villon' will have a hearing on November 21. This clever musician's name will be noted with especial interest as appearing for the first time in the Society's programmes. New instrumental works by English composers do not figure prominently in the scheme. We are to hear Sir Edward Elgar's new second Symphony on January 9; and another native musician who has achieved a sure place in our affections, Edward German, is to be again represented by his 'Welsh Rhapsody.' Herr Kreisler will play Elgar's Violin concerto on January 9. Sir Frederic Cowen will conduct eight of the twelve concerts, the remaining four being in the hands of 'guest-conductors': Mr. T. Beecham, M. Rachmaninoff, Mr. Landon Ronald, and Sir Henry J. Wood.

The Committee of the famous Welsh Choral Union announce four concerts, at the first of which, on November 18, Elgar's 'King Olaf' and a miscellaneous selection will be performed. The 'Messiah,' on December 16, is a choice actuated probably by financial reasons, as also the miscellaneous concert on February 3, at which Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford will sing and M. Zacharewitsch play. The magnificent choir which Mr. Harry Evans's genius has called into being will have its chief opportunity on March 16, when Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion is to be sung. Their earlier performance of this noble classic, in 1907, created a deep impression, and remains as one of their most notable achievements, although these are many in number.

An exceptionally interesting scheme has been drawn up for the eight concerts to be given in the Philharmonic Hall by the Akeroed Symphony Orchestra. The programmes are a happy blend of the strictly classical with the less-strictly classical. The works promised include Johann Strauss's suite 'Ritter Pasman,' Von Holst's 'Somerset Rhapsody' and Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody,' 'The lament for the son of Ossian'; also his new Symphony, written for the Centenary of the London Philharmonic Society.

The enterprising Societa Armonica, a combination of leading amateur and professional instrumentalists, will give three concerts in the Philharmonic Hall. The Committee's sympathy with modern music of an advanced trend is again shown in the draft programmes. At the first concert, on November 4, a symphony by Ernest Chausson will be played for the first time in Liverpool.

Founded for the object of providing innocent recreation for the people on Sundays, the Liverpool Sunday Society commences its twenty-sixth annual series of concerts and lectures on Sunday evenings in St. George's Hall on October 8. A subscription of three shillings entitles a member to twenty-two tickets for the reserved seats. To the general public the admission is free; a collection is taken. The varied contents of the syllabus testify to the ability of the management in providing musical recreation on Sunday evenings for those who require it. In addition to the Society's orchestra, which in Mr. John Lawson has an able and accomplished conductor, other bands are also occasionally heard, and first-rate vocalists. The Society has outlived the difficulties of its early days, when a good deal of opposition was shown to the movement.

Exceptional interest attaches to the visit of the Quinlan Opera Company, which will occupy the Royal Court Theatre from October 2 to 14. The works to be performed are Wagner's 'Valkyrie' and 'Tannhäuser,' Bizet's 'Carmen,' Offenbach's 'Tales of Hoffmann,' Puccini's 'Madame Butterfly' and 'The girl of the Golden West' (first production in English), Verdi's 'Aida,' Gounod's 'Faust,' Debussy's 'L'enfant prodigue,' and Humperdinck's 'Hansel und Gretel.'

Mr. Percy Harrison will give his usual series of four concerts in the Philharmonic Hall, commencing with Madame Tetrassini on October 11, and, 'in deference to the growing taste for orchestral music,' Mr. Harrison has arranged for the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, to play on November 29, and the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Nikisch, on March 14.

Chamber music is to receive exceptional attention during the season, and pleasurable anticipation is caused by the announcement that the Brodsky Quartet will give four concerts in St. George's Hall, and that visits will be paid by the St. Petersburg Quartet, the Rosé Quartet, the English String Quartet, and the Brussels Quartet, under the direction of Mr. Lawrence Atkinson. The newly-formed Rodewald Concert Club (president Sir C. V. Stanford) commences operations in the Carlton Hall, on October 16, with a chamber concert given by the Rawdon Briggs Quartet. On October 30, Mr. Plunket Greene will give a recital, and other interesting evenings will follow fortnightly.

If some beneficent person or persons would provide an endowment fund for choral societies in our great centres, the advantage to the public generally would probably equal, if not exceed, that of the multiplying of free libraries and the provision of half the cost of chapel organs. It would at least obviate the necessity for performing the 'Messiah' and the 'Elijah' so frequently. The former work is in fashion this year, and of the three performances to be given in December by important choral bodies, two are announced by the Liverpool Choral Society (formerly known as the Methodist Choral Union) and the Catholic Philharmonic Society. This latter recently-formed organization will revive Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' at their second concert in March.

Thanks to the enterprise of Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, the Hallé Orchestra will pay two visits to Liverpool, being conducted on October 21 by Mr. Michael Balling, and on December 2 by Sir Edward Elgar, whose second symphony will be performed for the first time here on this occasion.

The scheme of the Corporation free lectures for the ensuing session to be given in the Central Picton Hall and in various halls in the outlying suburbs, includes 'Handel and his music,' with vocal and instrumental selections (Rev. H. H. McCullagh), 'West Country Folk-songs' (Mr. Ernest Young), 'Opera: its origin and development' (Mr. Albert E. Workman), and 'Song, grave and gay' (Mr. F. H. Seddon).

The West Kirby Choral Society are putting Elgar's 'Black knight' into rehearsal, and the Ormskirk Musical Association have selected Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' and Brahms's 'Requiem' to be sung at their first and second concerts respectively.

The Warrington Musical Society will sing Elgar's 'Black knight' and Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave' at their first concert on November 22, and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' at their third concert on March 20.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The coming season promises to be the most distinguished ever known here. The problem of finding a successor to Hans Richter is a formidable but not a baffling one. Richter came to us at a time when he stood forth pre-eminent amongst European conductors; his withdrawal into private life and Mottl's recent death leave Nikisch, Weingartner and Strauss the outstanding men in Europe. They started conducting in early life, and commanding gifts enabled them to forge ahead. But both in England and abroad there are other men of singular capacity, yet of a younger generation, who, given the chance, would eagerly embrace the opportunity of making the Hallé concerts still more renowned, their personal success being bound up in the continued welfare of the enterprise. To-day the choice of potential conductors is vastly greater than it was when Richter was elected to the post—indeed, few things show the rapid progress of the past decade or two more clearly than a comparison of the names of the guest-conductors following Sir Charles Hallé's death and those already arranged. Ten or a dozen men will be heard during the approaching season: Bantock, Beecham, Bridge ('Messiah'), Ronald, Wood; Baling, Fried, Gabrilovich, Müller-Reuter and Schalk having already been engaged. The arrangements are not ready for publication at the time of going to press, and must be dealt with next month in greater fulness.

The 'ballad' style of concert has not flourished greatly here in recent years. Formerly the Harrison series were exclusively of this type, but latterly they have reflected the changed musical taste and have included both orchestral and chamber music; so that it has been left for Mr. Brand Lane to cater for the 'ballad' concert-goer on Saturday nights, and he does it with a lavish hand—witness the first programme with Donalda, Kirkby Lunn, Van Dyck, Henschel, Carreño and Mischa Elman. Mr. Lane's choir invariably sings at these concerts, too; about 300 voices strong, it began its career in the competitive arena of the Crystal Palace Temperance Fêtes of the eighties, and although no longer active participants in latter-day festivals, the list of choral works announced for this season is mainly drawn from works which have done duty as test-pieces at northern festivals.

Bauer, Casals and Kreisler give our season a good send-off on October 2. The Manchester Orpheus Choir's annual concert on October 18 will inaugurate a period of tremendous musical activity, for on the top of everything else comes the fortnight of grand opera with the touring Quinlan company, Debussy's 'L'enfant prodigue' and Puccini's latest opera being given here for the first time on October 24 and 27 respectively.

The prospects of our other organizations must be dealt with in the next issue, but I may note with peculiar gratification the engagement of the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society to sing at the London Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on February 17, under Sir Henry Wood, the works being Brahms's 'Alt-Rhapsodie' and Wagner's 'Liebesmahl der Apostel.'

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT.

A Cowen concert—to include 'The Veil' and the Overture 'Phantasy of life and love,' both conducted by the composer—will be given by the Choral Union on November 29. Sir Frederic's old orchestra, the Scottish, will play, and there will be included Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' to be conducted by the chorus-master, Dr. Coward. On March 27, our premier choral body will give Dvůřák's 'Spectre's Bride,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and Bantock's new unaccompanied choral ode in twenty parts, 'Atalanta in Calydon.' The Leeds Symphony Orchestra will play Hamish MacCunn's Overture, 'Land of the mountain and the flood,' which was given here years ago under the direction of the composer, then a mere boy, at the concerts of the late Dr. Rea. Dr. Coward will conduct.

The Postal Telegraph Society has recently re-organized its constitution, and will now be known as the Newcastle Musical Union. Its programmes are always of interest: at the first concert Brahms's Requiem will be essayed, and the first performance given here of Gustav von Holst's fine 'Choral hymns from the Rig Veda,' works which choral conductors on the look out for interesting novelties would do well to inspect. The second concert will be chiefly taken up with unaccompanied works, Bach's early motet, 'Praise the Lord, all ye heathen,' Brahms's 'Marienlieder,' &c. Mr. Bainton will conduct both concerts. The Armstrong College Choral Society will rehearse Bach's church cantata, 'Praise Jehovah in His splendour,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and some Northumbrian folk-songs. A new organization, the Nonconformist Choir Union, will sing Handel's 'Samson,' in February, under the baton of Mr. George Dodds.

An important scheme is the enlargement of the Philharmonic Orchestra and the extension of its activities so as to include four concerts. The syllabus has not yet been issued, but I am able to state that at each concert a symphony will be played, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, and Glazounov being represented this season, and that at each concert one or more works by living British composers will be included. As the additions to the Orchestra comprise some of the best instrumentalists in the district, and a thorough plan of rehearsals has been drawn up by the conductor,

Mr. E. L. Bainton, it looks as if the tentative attempts of the last two years to found a local permanent orchestra are likely to produce a scheme pregnant with rich possibilities. One important disadvantage the Orchestra labours under is that so many of its members are unable to get free from theatres and other positions of employment in the evenings, and that concerts at present must be given in the afternoons. The organization as a whole is thus not available for choral concerts; but, as time progresses, means will doubtless be found to get rid of this difficulty.

Mr. Harrison announces four concerts, the Chamber Music Society six, the Classical Concert Society four, the Newcastle Musical Society three concerts: but details are not yet issued.

The Lecture course of the Literary and Philosophical Society has four evenings devoted to music: Mr. Rutland Boughton on 'The music of the future,' Principal Hadow on 'Christmas Carols,' Mr. W. W. Starmer on 'Carillons and carillon music,' and Dr. Walford Davies on 'Music and human nature.' The Free Church Musicians' Union issue a capital programme of lectures to be given monthly. Principal Hadow will speak on 'The choice of music in Church Services,' and several practical talks will be given by well-known local musicians both of the Established and Free Churches.

The Quinlan Opera Company begin on October 16 the most attractive programme we have had for years, including 'Valkyrie' (unfortunately clashing with the visit of Mr. Boughton), Puccini's 'The girl of the Golden West,' Debussy's 'Prodigal Son,' Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel,' besides more familiar operas.

Tynemouth Choral Society will give Elgar's 'King Olaf' in December, Whitley Bay Choral Society will give Boughton's 'Midnight' next month, and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' and in February a concert of unaccompanied music, including Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' Bach's motet, 'Come, Jesu, come,' and a group or Elizabethan Madrigals. Sunderland Philharmonic will rehearse Berlioz's 'Faust' and Brahms's 'Requiem.'

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

The musical prospects of the coming season seem just as bright as ever. The Sacred Harmonic Society are preparing Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám,' and Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' for their choral concerts; and the two orchestral programmes suggest a Tchaikovsky symphony, with the 'Siegfried Idyll' and the 'Ride of the Valkyries' in the first, and 'Till Eulenspiegel' and 'Finlandia' as the attractions at the latter concert. Mr. Harry Dearth will be the vocalist on the first occasion, and Mr. Morgan Kingston on the second.

The attractions at the Subscription Concerts include the Hallé Orchestra under Baling's direction, Elena Gerhardt and Moiseiwitsch, Busoni and Antonietti, and lastly Julia Culp, Marie Hall, and Miss Cantello, the well-known Nottingham pianist.

We are also to have visits from Tetrizzini, a pianoforte and vocal recital by Mr. Archie Rosenthal and Madame Marchesi, and an orchestral performance by the New Symphony Orchestra from London, directed by Mr. Landon Ronald.

Local talent will be represented by a concert given by Miss Bisiaux, a rising violinist, and Miss Lizzie Parsons, a promising pianist; and the programme will include music by Brahms, Schumann, Liszt and Chopin.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

A further attempt is to be made, during the coming winter, to remove from Sheffield the reproach that, in their enthusiasm for choral singing, the people there are disposed to overlook or neglect other branches of musical art. The orchestral Promenade Concerts, established two years ago, are to be continued under the management and financial guarantee of the committee of four who have undertaken the task—Messrs. E. Wolloughby Firth, C. D. Leng, T. Walter Hall and J. A. Rodgers. In a circular issued to the public the promoters state that Sheffield has hitherto fallen short of other large cities in the supply of a good type of professional orchestral music, and in order to remedy the failing, they are anxious to see the concerts permanently established.

Orchestral music however is costly, and if the end is to be attained, extended public support is necessary in the coming season, otherwise the concerts must be discontinued. At each concert there will be a symphony and a concerto, and a further feature will be the inclusion of a number of the best class of art-songs.

The concerts are to be given in the Albert Hall with an orchestra of about sixty players, conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The dates are Tuesdays, October 24, November 21, February 13, and March 12. The following works are to be performed during the series: Symphonies—Beethoven, No. 5; Haydn, No. 13, in G; Tchaikovsky, No. 5; Mendelssohn, No. 3 ('Scotch'). Concertos—Liszt in E flat (pianist, Miss Tosta de Benici); Tchaikovsky in D (violinist, W. Arthur Catterall); Schumann in A minor (pianist, Miss Ivy Parkin); Rubinstein in D minor (pianist, Mr. Cecil Baumer). The list also includes the overtures—'Oberon' (Weber); 'William Tell' (Rossini); 'The bartered bride' (Smetana); 'Figaro' (Mozart); and 'Egmont' (Beethoven). Mr. J. W. Phillips will act as organist. Three shillings buys a season ticket for the four concerts, and a guinea, a 'patron's ticket' with eight reserved tickets. The cheapness is remarkable, and it is not surprising to learn that the promoters cannot under any circumstances make a profit. The venture in several features is unique. Usually this kind of pioneer work is done by large societies or by a concert-giver aiming at ultimate money gain. Here is a party of music-lovers prepared to work (and pay) in the hope that a great city may derive some artistic impulse and benefit from a scheme devised solely for the furtherance of musical art.

The accounts of the recent Sheffield Triennial Festival show a total loss of £1,287 19s. 1d. Three years ago the loss just exceeded £200; on all previous occasions a profit was made. The guarantors will not be called upon as, prior to the Festival, the Reserve Fund exceeded £3,000. The average attendance at the concerts was 1,017; the seating capacity of the hall is 1,650. An analysis of the attendance figures shows some significant indications of public choice is the matter of works and composers:

Wednesday morning, 'Messiah' ... ..	808
Wednesday evening, 'Ruth' (Schumann) ... ..	1,084
Thursday morning, Bach's Mass ... ..	879
Thursday evening, Wagner and Brahms ... ..	806
Friday morning, 'St. Matthew' Passion ... ..	1,126
Friday evening, 'Parsifal' and 'Omar Khayyam' ... ..	1,312

The choral societies have now resumed rehearsals. The Amateur Musical Society will give in December the first performance in Sheffield of Sir F. H. Cowen's Cardiff work 'The Veil,' under the direction of Sir Henry J. Wood. For the spring concert the newly revised edition of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'The Rose of Sharon' is promised. The oratorio has not been performed in Sheffield since 1885.

The Sheffield Musical Union are preparing Sir E. Elgar's 'King Olaf' for performance under Dr. Coward who, at the Society's spring concert, will also direct the first performance in Sheffield of Mr. Hubert Bath's Scottish cantata 'The wedding of Shon Maclean.'

The Sheffield Choral Union (Mr. H. Reynolds, conductor), have selected Handel's 'Saul' and Auber's opera 'Masaniello' for performance during the coming season.

The Norton Lees Choral Society (conductor, Mr. A. Bagshaw) announce Gade's 'Psyche' for the autumn concert.

The Sheffield Chamber Music Society has discontinued its concerts after seven successful and enjoyable seasons. The support promised for an eighth year did not justify the Committee in continuing their arrangements.

The syllabus of the five subscription concerts to be given at the Albert Hall on October 12, November 14, January 23, February 20, and March 19 is an example of enterprise in bringing well-known singers and executants before the public. The first concert, at which Zacharewitsch will play the Elgar Violin concerto with the Hallé Orchestra under Herr Balling, promises to be the most interesting.

The October number of The Bookman is an enlarged one, and contains illustrated articles upon Wagner and upon the Bayreuth Festival. Mr. Reginald R. Buckley is one of the writers of special articles.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

INVERCARGILL (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave, on June 20, their first concert since their recent decision to abandon choral work. The orchestra, though small and leaving much to be desired in balance, gave creditable performances of Suppé's 'Morning, Noon and Night' Overture, Massenet's 'Le dernier sommeil de la Vierge,' transcriptions from 'Tannhäuser' and 'Carmen,' Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture and German's 'Nell Gwyn' Dances. Mr. C. R. S. Barrett played the first movement of Beethoven's Violin concerto, and vocal numbers were given by Miss Vera Small and Mr. Norman Churton. Mr. Charles Gray conducted. The following statistics of the work of this Union were read by Mr. Gray at a recent annual meeting: 'From June, 1891, to December, 1910, we have given eighty choral and orchestral concerts. Twenty-one oratorios and cantatas with orchestral accompaniment have accounted for sixty performances (including the "Messiah" fifteen times). There have also been ninety-one choruses, part-songs, glees and madrigals (182 performances), twenty-seven overtures (fifty-five performances), seven selections from symphonies (nine performances), eighty-four concertos, suites, fantasias, transcriptions and other concert pieces (176 performances). Altogether 230 choral and orchestral concerted works have been performed 482 times.'

QUEENSTOWN (TASMANIA).—In honour of Miss Pearl Campbell's departure from Queenstown, to pursue her musical studies at Melbourne, a farewell concert was given on July 18, under the direction of Mr. F. G. Constantine. Miss Campbell took part as violinist in examples of chamber music and as a contralto in concerted vocal numbers. The occasion was a decided success. The Queenstown Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Constantine, are studying 'The Messiah' for performance.

Foreign Notes.

BARCELONA.

At the Palace of Arts the dramatised fairy-tale 'Liliana,' by Apelles Mestres, with extensive incidental music by the prominent Spanish composer, Señor Henri Granados, was recently produced, and was accorded a very favourable reception.

BERLIN.

On September 25, the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (conductor, Herr Oscar Fried) will give a memorial concert devoted to works by Mahler. The programme will include the C minor Symphony and the 'Kindertotenlieder.'—At the Kaiser Wilhelm-Gedächtniskirche, Herr Walter Fischer recommenced his annual organ recitals on September 7. The programme contained, amongst other things, the Fantasy and Fugue in G major by Johann Krebs, and a novelty, 'Pastorale,' by Roger-Ducasse.—Among the novelties promised for the season at the Royal Opera House are 'Der Traum,' by Mrazek, the old ballet 'Der Corsar' (after Byron), by Adam, and Richard Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier.' Great preparations are taking place for the production of the latter work, which is to be given under Dr. Karl Muck's direction on November 7.—To celebrate the coming hundredth anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt (October 22), Signor Ferruccio Busoni will give six pianoforte recitals entirely devoted to Liszt's original pianoforte works and transcriptions.—The Komische Oper promises the following novelties for the season:—'Siberia,' by Umberto Giordano, Cilea's 'Adrienne Lecouvreur,' 'Germania,' by Franchetti, and Catalani's 'Wally.'

BRUSSELS.

The season of the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie commenced on September 6, with an excellent performance of Charpentier's 'Louise.' On this occasion Herr Otto Lohse made his first appearance as permanent conductor-in-chief. — The management promises the following new works: 'Thérèse,' by Massenet; Saint-Saëns's 'Dejanire,' 'La Cloche,' by Vincent d'Indy; 'La Farce du cavier,' and 'La Cabrera,' by Gabriel Dupont; Wolf-Ferrari's 'Le secret de Suzanne'; Humperdinck's 'Enfants de Roi'; Puccini's 'La Fanciulla del West'; and two works by Belgian composers, J. Van den Eeden's 'Rhéna' and Radoux's 'Oudelette.'

COPENHAGEN.

Among the posthumous compositions of the late Johan Svendsen there is said to be the complete score of a musical drama composed to a text by the talented Danish poet, Hermann Bang. The work is to be produced at the earliest possible moment at the Royal Theatre, where Svendsen was conductor for twenty-five years.

DORTMUND.

The thirty-second organ recital given by Herr C. Holschneider proved of exceptional interest. The programme included the first performance of Busoni's 'Sinfonia contrapunctistica.' This composition, originally published as a pianoforte work, is intended as a termination of Bach's 'Kunst der Fuge,' and seems to represent all modern contrapuntal achievement. The orchestral arrangement has been done by Herr Friedrich Stock, and the organ arrangement by Herr Wilhelm Middelschulte, organist of the Thomas Orchestra, Chicago, whom Busoni describes in the dedication of the work as the 'master of counterpoint.'

DRESDEN.

On August 19 the 'Musiklustspiel' (comic opera) 'Der Fünfurthe' (The five o'clock tea), composed by Theodor Blumer to the libretto by Wilhelm Wolters, was produced under Herr Kutzschbach's direction at the Königliches Schauspielhaus with considerable success.—The Royal Opera, which has been closed for extensive alterations, reopened its season with Puccini's opera 'Madame Butterfly.'

HALLE.

Under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Neisser the symphonic poem 'Korsholm,' by the Finnish composer Armas Järnefeldt, was played for the first time, arousing much interest.

HAMBURG.

Among the new works to be produced at the Municipal Theatre during the coming season are the opera 'Die verschenkte Frau,' by Eugen d'Albert, and F. Busoni's recently-finished opera 'Die Brautwahl.'

LEIPSIK.

Professor Winderstein intends to perform the following works for the first time in Leipzig at his Philharmonic Concerts: Violin concerto, by Karl Bleye; Prelude to Pfitzner's musical drama, 'Die Rose vom Liebesgarten'; and 'Eine Messe des Lebens,' by Frederick Delius.

MUNICH.

The most interesting of the Wagner and Mozart festival performances given at the Prinzregenten Theatre and the Residenz Theatre, have been the occasions when Dr. Richard Strauss officiated at the conductor's desk. Under his auspices, highly interesting interpretations of 'Tristan und Isolde,' 'The marriage of Figaro,' and 'Così fan tutte' were given. He accompanied the recitatives on the pianoforte, at times adding (as did the conductors in Mozart's time), witty and amusing improvisations.

PARIS.

Perhaps the most interesting feature since the Grand Opera reopened its doors has been the revival of Richard Strauss's 'Salome,' with Miss Mary Garden as a fascinating interpreter of the title-part.—At the Opéra-Comique, Dukas's 'Ariane et Barbe-bleue' has been much appreciated.

ROME.

Signor Mugnone, who was to have conducted the special season of Italian opera at the Costanzi Theatre, has asked to be relieved of his duties. His contention is that he, having been engaged for an 'Italian' season, a patriotic manifestation of native art particularly appropriate at the fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Kingdom of Italy, would not consent to conduct Richard Strauss's 'Rosenkavalier,' which was to take the place of Spontini's 'Fernando Cortez' and Franchetti's 'Christophoro Colombo.' Another conductor, Maestro Tango, has therefore been engaged.

TURIN.

At the Balbo Theatre a new opera by the Cuban composer Eduardo de Fuentes, 'Dolorosa' (libretto by Gustavo Macchi), has recently been produced with great success.

VALENCIA.

A new musical society, called L'Athénée musical, has lately been founded, and was inaugurated with a concert at which Beethoven's rarely-heard 'Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt,' for chorus and orchestra, was performed under the direction of Señor Ripollés.

Miscellaneous.

The Etude (Philadelphia) for September says: 'One of the most interesting bits of reading that has come before our notice for some time has been the special centenary issue of the London Musical Times, published in commemoration of the centenary of the Novello publishing house. It is impossible to recount the doings of this active firm during its hundred years of existence. Hardly an English composer of any importance is not represented in its catalogue, especially as regards choral works such as Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' &c. Many of Mendelssohn's most important works, including 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah,' were published by them. The Novello firm has always stood for musical advancement, and was perhaps the first publishing firm to realise the immense importance of producing the works of the great masters at a price within the means of all. Many people regard a music publishing firm as a money-making institution pure and simple. An examination of the centenary supplement of the Musical Times will awaken many people to the lofty idealism which must be present in all great musical publishing houses if they are to succeed—indeed, this applies to all undertakings if they are worth while.'

Mr. H. P. Dickinson, who has just retired after forty-two years' service as organist and choirmaster of St. John's Church, Grantham, was formerly a pupil, then assistant, under the well-known organist, William Dixon, of the Parish Church, Grantham. In 1869 he formed the Grantham Choral Class, which has run almost continuously until the present day—the name being changed in 1881 to the Grantham Philharmonic Society. In addition to this Society, he has at different times conducted eight other choral societies in and around Grantham. Twelve months ago he was stricken with blindness. To mark his retirement from active life, a public subscription raised on his behalf has reached the sum of over £130.

A grand farewell benefit concert in honour of Madame Albani has been arranged to take place at the Royal Albert Hall on the afternoon of October 14. The New Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. London Ronald, and the Smallwood-Metcalf Choir will take part; and assistance has been promised by Madame Patti, Miss Muriel Foster (Mrs. Goetz), Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Adèle Verne, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Plunket Greene, Sir Charles Santley, and Mr. Haydn Wood.

A Municipal Choral Society has been formed at Bournemouth, under the management of the Winter Gardens Committee, and it is proposed, by the co-operation of the new body and Mr. Dan Godfrey's orchestra, to give a two days' festival in 1913. The conductor of the choir is Dr. Holloway. The prospective programme for the present season includes 'Merrie England' (German), 'Elijah,' and 'Hiawatha.'

Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist to the Corporation and University of Manchester, and Mr. H. G. Dakyns, Hon. Sec. to the Classical Concert Society of Newcastle-on-Tyne, have received the decoration of 'Officier d'Académie de France.'

The Southport Choral Society (conductor Mr. J. C. Clarke) have included the following works in their programme for the coming season: 'A tale of old Japan' (Coleridge-Taylor); 'The Deluge' (Saint-Saëns); 'Toward the unknown region' (Vaughan-Williams).

The Classical Concerts Society announce an autumn season of ten chamber concerts to be given at Bechstein Hall on the following dates: October 11, 18 and 25, November 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29, December 6 and 13.

Six concerts will be given during the coming season by the London Trio (Madame Amina Goodwin, pianoforte; Mr. Simonetti, violin; Mr. W. E. Whitehouse, violoncello). On each occasion a work by Brahms will be performed.

The Dover Choral Union (conductor Mr. H. J. Taylor) have selected 'Merrie England' (German), 'Elijah,' and a concert-version of the Dover Pageant music (H. J. Taylor) for performance during the season.

Madame Alys Bateman is engaged as vocalist for the Sapellnikoff tour which commences on November 11, and embraces most of the principal cities in England.

The Directors of the Edinburgh Choral Union have obtained a Royal Warrant permitting them to adopt the title 'Edinburgh Royal Choral Union.'

The Cherniavsky Trio left London in September for a concert tour in South Africa, Australia, Canada, and the United States.

Joint recitals by Messrs. Kreisler, Casals, and Bauer will be given at Queen's Hall on the afternoons of October 3 and 10.

Mr. R. W. Tyson, organist of Christ Church, Woking, has been appointed Director of Music at the United Services College, Windsor.

Miss Evangeline Anthony (violinist) has returned to London from a highly successful concert tour in South America.

Answers to Correspondents.

S. L.—Articles by Mr. Shedlock on Beethoven's sketch-books were published in the Musical Times, vol. xxxiii. (1892), pp. 331, 394, 461, 523, 589, 649, and 717, and were concluded in January, 1893. A second series by the same writer was published in September, 1893 (p. 530); January (p. 13), July (p. 449), and September (p. 596), 1894. The following articles have also appeared: 'Drum parts in Beethoven's Symphonies,' February, 1894; 'Beethoven and the Sordino,' August, 1895; 'Beethoven and his Terms,' July, 1898; 'Beethoven, his portrait and—its blot,' January, 1901; 'Who was Beethoven's "Unsterbliche Geliebte"?' (by Mr. Ernest Newman), June, 1911.

H. MINCHIN.—Cantatas, &c., for small choirs that can be acceptably performed with pianoforte and harmonium (a part for which instrument has to be specially made, as a rule), are Macfarren's 'May Day,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon Suite,' Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Haydn's 'Spring,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' (wholly choral), or Handel's 'Samson' (selection), which is one of his most dramatic and beautiful oratorios.

W. A. B.—Grove's Dictionary gives notices of the lives and works of Raff, Wieniawski, and Mackenzie. A full sketch of the career of the last-named composer and a list of his works up to that date are given in the Musical Times for June, 1898.

CLIFTONIAN.—We do not know of a South Australian choir exchange or one in any other colony. Perhaps some of our readers will be able to give the information.

NEW HORSE.—M. Ysaye was born at Liège on July 16, 1858. Three columns are devoted to him in 'Grove.'

Other answers are unavoidably held over.

THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR.

A Library of Expert Instruction for a
First Payment of 1s. 6d.

The aim of "The Musical Educator" is to supply in compact and interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG,

"The Piano and how to Play it."

EDWIN H. LEMARE,

"The Art of Organ Playing."

MADAME MARCHESI,

"The Teaching of Singing."

JOHN DUNN,

"On Playing the Violin."

DR. F. H. COWEN,

"The Art of Conducting."

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeeggio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms. Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

Its Value to the Teacher.

In "The Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that "The Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"The Musical Educator" is full or useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent."

Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—

"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader.
... It contains excellent instructions."

FREE INQUIRY.

TO THE CAXTON PUBLISHING CO., LTD.,
140, Surrey Street, London, W.C.

Please send me, free of charge, and without any obligation on my part, your illustrated booklet on "The Musical Educator," and particulars of your plan by which the five volumes are delivered for a first payment of 1s. 6d., the balance being paid by a few small monthly payments.

NEW CANTATAS. CHRISTIANA

BY
F. A. CHALLINOR, MUS. DOC.

A SACRED Cantata, founded on Part II. of "The Pilgrim's Progress." The work consists of 30 numbers, and employs the usual quartet of Soloists and Chorus—mixed and female. The writing has been rigidly kept within practicable limits of difficulty, but the interest and beauty of the music reaches a high level. Grateful to sing, effective in performance, and with a wealth of effective choral work, it is a Cantata of outstanding value. Time, two hours.

Staff, 2s.; Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, One Penny.
Orchestral parts on hire.

THE ETERNAL PROMISE

BY
W. G. WOODCOCK.

A CANTATA for church or concert use with special appropriateness for Harvest-tide celebrations. Four Soloists are required, and plenty of work is provided for the Chorus; also two beautiful hymns in which the congregation may join. The work is comparatively simple and easily got up, is extremely melodious and full of effective and interesting writing for Choir. Time, about 35 minutes.

Staff, 2s.; Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, One Penny.
Orchestral parts on hire.

ROMANCE OF THE ROSE

BY ARTHUR PEARSON.

BASED on a folk-custom, the theme of this Cantata forms a pretty story, and the music is of extreme melodiousness and grace. Laid out in eleven numbers. Solos are provided for all the parts, and Choruses for full Choir, and Ladies' Choir make up the remainder. A very charming work. Time, about 50 minutes.

Staff, 1s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 6d.; Words only, One Penny.

LONDON: BAYLEY & FERGUSON,
2, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 6s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

CHESTER'S CIRCULATING MUSIC LIBRARY, BRIGHTON.

5, Cathcart Road,
South Kensington, S.W.
July 25th, 1903.

Dear Mr. Chester,

I hear that it is your intention further to develop the business in connection with your Circulating Music Library.

In wishing you every success in that undertaking, it gives me much pleasure to say how complete and admirable upon all occasions I have found your Library, as well as your stock of music. Indeed your business has always seemed to me to lack nothing that any musician or student could possibly require.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) W. KUHE.

5, Clifton Road,
Brighton.
September 8, 1903.

Dear Mr. Chester,

In returning the Music you were kind enough to send me on selection, I cannot help saying a few words about your Music Library, and being the doyen of the Musical profession in Brighton, I hope it will not be arrogant in me, if I speak as the representative of the profession.

My experience is mostly with Music for String Instruments and for the Orchestra; and in that direction your lending Library has done great things for us. It has enabled Conductors to attempt works, and the public to enjoy them, which it would have been very difficult and very expensive to procure without your help. The completeness of the Library is quite astonishing, and whether we wanted a Haydn Symphony or a Tchaikowsky, a Mozart or a Brahms, they were equally at our disposal, and so it was with Chamber Music.

I can only hope that you have been repaid for the labour and thought you must have given to this matter, and that it has been as profitable to you as it has been beneficial to us professors and the public.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) LEOP. STERN.

South Kensington, S.W.
June 15, 1904.

Dear Mr. Chester,

I should like to be allowed to express my admiration of the skill, tact, knowledge, and promptitude which have enabled you to make so great a success of your Circulating Music Library. Your enterprise in always securing the latest important compositions published abroad, as well as at home, is so remarkable that my friends and I are accustomed to speak of Brighton as the most likely part of London and its suburbs, in which to obtain anything in the way of music that is more than usually new or uncommon.

In the hope that your valuable services may long continue available to the musical public,

I am, dear Mr. Chester,

Very faithfully yours,

(Signed) EDGAR F. JACQUES.

Dear Mr. Chester,

If the testimony of an obscure amateur is of any use, I am very glad indeed to assure anyone who reads this, that for completeness, advantages, and low subscription, no other musical lending library I know of can compare with yours; and I have tried some of the best in London, Vienna, Berlin, Paris, Moscow and other great musical centres. No matter what music I want, and I have generally required the newest, foreign, and least-known works, you hand it me at once from your wonderful store, or procure it for me with a promptness that I have never experienced elsewhere.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Mr. Chester,

Since you deem my testimony of value, it gives me great pleasure to bear witness to the remarkable comprehensiveness of your stock of music.

Your ability to supply me at once with the latest compositions, Continental as well as British, has often surprised me, and on several occasions been of great service, when away from home.

Yours truly,

Dear Mr. Chester,

I duly received the parcel, and am glad that you have at last triumphed over the sleepy publishers.

I take this opportunity of thanking you for the way in which you have, during the last 24 years, always succeeded in supplying me with admirable promptitude and usually from stock—with the most out-of-the-way compositions by all sorts of foreign composers. It would have been a shame if these people had broken down your record!

That you may long be spared to prosecute your business successfully is the hearty wish of

Yours very faithfully,

Extract from letter received from the late Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.R.C.O.:

"My London friends envy me, because, thanks to your enterprise, I know all the newest music long before they do . . . with your extraordinary stock and your complete lending library, Brighton musicians ought to be the best read in the country. Let me then discharge some of the great debt of musical gratitude, that I owe you."

1, Norfolk Crescent,
Hyde Park, W.
March 27, 1905.

My dear Mr. Chester,

I must write and compliment you upon your admirable and wonderfully comprehensive Musical Library, which seems quite unique and is kept thoroughly up to date.

All the most recent publications are there,—English, French, German, Russian, Italian.

The music lover who resides at Brighton has certainly reason to be grateful to you for providing him with such excellent musical fare.

As one who has partaken of this fare, I have much pleasure in expressing to you the delight I have experienced.

Believe me,

Yours sincerely,

A NEW PAIR OF HANDS.

The Postal Course of MACDONALD SMITH'S System of Perfect Pianoforte Playing has been taken by many professionals holding the highest degrees and diplomas in music.

One says: "To me it has been a veritable godsend." Another: "I play better than ever." Another: "I have never spent £3 3s. to greater advantage in all my musical life." Another: "Your System has given me practically a NEW PAIR OF HANDS."

Are you content still to go on in the old way?

If you desire a new pair of hands for your Piano Playing, write in the first instance for the Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing" (free by post).

COMPLETE COURSE OF LESSONS BY CORRESPONDENCE,

THREE GUINEAS (by instalments if desired).

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

OF INTEREST TO ALL PIANISTS

must be any information which will lead them to attain greater proficiency in any branch of their art, and an approved means of becoming a good Sight-Player cannot but appeal strongly.

To play at sight, it is true, may not be considered a sine qua non of the expert performer's equipment, but it may be safely averred that he cannot become an expert musician without this ability. Life is too short laboriously to study every one of the pieces with which the musician of catholic tastes and wide sympathies must become acquainted.

Neither can it be forgotten that, even for the least ambitious or proficient, there can be no real pleasure from pianoforte playing without facility in playing at sight.

In the Ehremayer System, the problem of how to acquire proficiency in Sight-Playing has been attacked in a manner both original and fundamental.

Numbers of pupils have already proved the practical results which are the outcome of the scientific principles upon which the System is based, but there are many readers of "The Musical Times" who have not yet investigated the matter for themselves, and to such full particulars will gladly be sent.

If you are interested, you should write for the free Booklet.

TO ORGAN STUDENTS.

The following is the specification of a Three-Manual and Pedal Reed Organ, recently the property of a wealthy and enthusiastic amateur. The instrument was built in sections, and special reeds were obtained, some from France, some from Germany, but most are English. There is no "borrowing" whatever; there is no duplicating. Each draw-knob brings on a separate rank, extending throughout the whole of the key-board. The crescendo on the Swell is splendidly graduated.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A full orchestra is one of the noblest works of man. It is potentially the apotheosis of musical unity and variety, a palette from which the most gorgeous colour and the subtlest tints can be evolved by the magician's wand. It has inspired the profoundest and most glorious music of the world's greatest composers, and yet its full possibilities are only partly explored and can never be exhausted until man's imagination runs dry.

The London Symphony Orchestra splendidly exemplifies this evolution, and is one of the most valued musical assets of Great Britain. Its achievements in presenting with great perfection the finest masterpieces of orchestral art, and its world-wide reputation,—made outside this country by the enthusiastic testimony of the most eminent foreign conductors,—are a source of legitimate pride to all interested in British musical art. This patriotic pride is accentuated by the fact that the hundred or more members of the Orchestra are nearly all British-born. The few exceptions were welcomed because of their great capacity, and because for many years they had worked in comradeship with native players.

The origin of the Orchestra as a separate and independent organization was almost fortuitous. Its formation was the courageous and happy inspiration of a few bold spirits who were informally discussing a serious crisis that had developed in the ranks of metropolitan orchestral players. The following is a brief account of the circumstances that led to that crisis.

As related in our sketch of Sir Henry Wood's career (March, 1911), Mr. Robert Newman in 1895, formed an orchestral body for the purpose of a series of Promenade Concerts to be given at Queen's Hall. Sir (then Mr.) Henry Wood was engaged to conduct. The band thus brought into being comprised the cream of London orchestral players, and as they rehearsed and performed daily they were soon welded into unity by the genius of their conductor. In 1896 Mr. Newman organized a series of symphony concerts at which the new orchestra and the famous Lamoureux Orchestra from Paris performed. Wood and his Queen's Hall Orchestra emerged favourably from the inevitable comparison, and his organization was entrusted with a series of symphony concerts on its own account. Then difficulties arose owing to the outside demands upon the members of the Orchestra, who for years had been accustomed to play at the opera and provincial festivals, and their unwillingness to sacrifice the important part of their income derived from these sources. Wood had to face an abandonment of his artistic ideals or to reconstitute his band from players willing to give him exclusive service at rehearsals and performances. In view of all the circumstances, about three fourths of the members decided to resign. One of the last engagements of the original band was to play under Wood at Miss Wakefield's Kendal (Westmorland) Festival in May, 1904. During the journey down, some members discussed the crisis and then and there resolved to endeavour to form a new orchestra. The plotters were Mr. A. Borsdorf (horn), Mr. T. R. Busby (horn), Mr. John Solomon (trumpet), and Mr. Van der Meerschen (horn). No strings, no wood-wind, no percussion, only bold brass accustomed to raise the wind! No time was lost. A meeting was arranged for at St. Andrew's Hall, Newman Street, London, early in May, and invitations to attend were sent to all the seceders and to others who had previously for various reasons left the Queen's Hall Orchestra. About one hundred interested attended. Mr. Busby unfolded the scheme, which was a proposal to form a new orchestra on co-operative lines and with a constitution that gave the organization independence. All who desired to join were asked to subscribe one guinea as an entrance fee. The meeting was unanimous in accepting the scheme, and a managing committee was elected consisting of the above-named brass quartet, plus Mr. Alfred Hobday (viola) and Mr. E. F. James (bassoon). Mr. Busby was appointed secretary.

Success was immediate. It was at once obvious that an exceptionally fine band had been gathered together, and that the members were animated not merely by the perfectly legitimate object of adding to their professional income but by the highest artistic ideals and a desire to show the world the best qualities of British orchestral playing. Dr. Richter was approached; he warmly approved the scheme, and consented to conduct the inaugural concert, which was given at Queen's Hall on June 9, 1904.

Thus encouraged, the committee ventured to arrange for a series of symphony concerts at Queen's Hall. They had no regular conductor, and to this day they have pursued this policy of freedom. Dr. (now Sir) Frederic Cowen conducted the first concert of the series on October 27, 1904, and the others were conducted and, besides, it has performed at numerous other concerts at the Royal Albert Hall and elsewhere under the auspices of the National Sunday League. In the provinces successful tours have been organized, and the Orchestra has been engaged en bloc at the Norwich, Newcastle, and Southport Festivals. A notable enterprise was the organization in 1905 of two concerts in Paris, given under the patronage of King Edward and President Loubet: the co-operation of the Leeds Philharmonic Choir and of Sir Charles Stanford was secured. M. Colonne and M. Messager also conducted. The performances were given in the Châtelet Theatre, a not very favourable arena. The enthusiasm of the reception was great, and the success of the visit fully repaid the trouble expended. Another Continental appearance was made on April 6, 1908, when, at the invitation of the 'Société des Nouveaux Concerts,' a musical body of considerable importance in Antwerp, the Orchestra played under Mr. Peter Raabe in that city and earned many encomiums.

by Herr Arthur Nikisch, Mr. Fritz Steinbach, Sir Charles Stanford, M. Edouard Colonne, Sir Edward Elgar, and Mr. Georg Henschel. At every one of these concerts brilliant performances were given, and the reputation of the organization as one of the finest of its kind in the world was made. The foreign conductors especially were

Of late years Dr. Richter has been the most frequently engaged conductor, but besides, the Orchestra has played under Mr. Safonoff, Signor Arbos, Mr. Max Fiedler, Mr. Sergius Kussewitsky, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in addition to the conductors named above.

Sir Edward Elgar has been elected conductor-in-chief for the symphony concerts to take place during the season 1911-12. Thirteen concerts will be given, of which Sir Edward will conduct six, Herr Nikisch three, and Herr Mengelberg, Herr Fritz Steinbach, and M. Gustave Doret, one each. Thus England is represented solely by Sir Edward. Probably one reason for the non-engagement of other English conductors who have won their spurs is that they are already before the public with rival orchestras of their own. The advantage to the concert-going public of a variety of conductors is that they are afforded an opportunity of comparing the readings of eminent men, and also of hearing the interpretations of specialists warm in their praise, and as they enjoyed ample opportunity of comparing the London orchestra with the best Continental orchestras, their testimony was especially valuable. Since this period the Orchestra has given in Queen's Hall alone over one hundred symphony concerts in the styles of music with which they are most in sympathy. The one-conductor system has its advantages in the way of securing unity of execution and of expression, but it has the disadvantage of stereotyping one view of the music performed. To hear a masterpiece under Nikisch, Weingartner, Richter, Safonoff or Wood, is like viewing a great cathedral from many standpoints.

The London Symphony Orchestra is to visit the United States and Canada in April, 1912. Nikisch was approached by an American syndicate to arrange for an orchestral tour, and he stipulated that the full band of the London Symphony Orchestra was to be engaged. Twenty-two towns, including Toronto and Montreal, are scheduled for the tour, which, with such a conductor and such an orchestra, should be a triumphal one.

Apart from the interest of the music played, the mere sonority of the tone of the orchestra arrests the attention. The strings (1st violins 16, 2nd violins 16, violas 12, cellos 12, double-own concerts the members render their services without fee, their only chance of remuneration being a possible dividend at the end of the season. A substantial reserve fund has been built up, and the Company has now ample funds in hand to finance its various enterprises. The entrance fee, which has been gradually raised as the Orchestra basses 10: total 66) have a superb quality, for one reason because their instruments are of such fine quality. The opinion may be hazarded that no orchestra in the world has instruments of greater value. The leaders of the strings are respectively Mr. Arthur W. Payne, Mr. W. H. Eayres, Mr. A. Hobday, Mr. B. P. Parker, and Mr. C. Winterbottom. All other departments are equally well served.

The co-operative basis of the constitution has been maintained from the time of the inception of the Orchestra to the present day. It is its own master, and for its own concerts it elects conductors. It also offers its services to concert-givers and at festivals, but it is so far jealous of its reputation as to require an assurance that conductors who aspire to be associated with the Orchestra shall be competent.

The Orchestra is incorporated under the Limited Liability Act with a capital of £1,000 in £1 shares. Every member must hold shares to the value of £10, but may not hold more. At their

FRANZ LISZT.

OCTOBER 22, 1811—JULY 31, 1886.

BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

IV.

The more one knows of Liszt's work, the more clearly one realises the number of lines on which he was a pioneer. 'Liszt,' said the Countess Sayn-Wittgenstein, 'has thrown his spear further into the future than Wagner.' That dictum seems perfectly true to-day, half-a-century or so after it was uttered. Wagner, of course, was by far the greater musician of the two; but his work has practically ended with him. Like Bach, he is a magnificent terminal post. He had numberless imitators in the generation preceding this; but he has had no real followers, no one who has carried his principles—the principles that were specifically his—a stage further. To-day he is an emotional stimulus rather than a formal model. Liszt, with much less imaginative power and musical scope than Wagner, has nevertheless had a greater influence upon modern developments. Many a new form or spirit that is unthinkingly called Wagnerian is in reality Lisztian; we have only to play, for example, through the volume of his collected songs to see how much of the very essence of Hugo Wolf derives from them. He is not so much 'the Wagner of the song' as Liszt to the nth. Like most pioneers, Liszt could do little more than take men to the frontiers of the new land, leaving them to occupy and develop it. The great innovator in music, as I have elsewhere urged, is seldom the great master of achievement. To build firmly for all time the musician needs to have his foundations well laid for him by his predecessors. Hence the work of the really epoch-marking men quickly comes to have a thoroughly conservative, 'classical' look. Bach, to the generation that immediately succeeded him, was a cautious old fogey, with his eyes turned to the past rather than to the future. Wagner, to those who have followed the most recent developments of music, is already a classic, symmetrical almost to the point of formality, with a touch of Greek restraint and temperance even in his moments of wildest passion. 'Tristan' is as 'classical' now as the 'Œdipus Rex.' The very great men so soon become classics because, with all their ardour and their haste, they never lose sight of the generalities of human feeling and experience. There is always something common about them, in the best sense of the word; all kinds of men can go to their art and see themselves mirrored in it. Hence the universality and permanence of their appeal. The artist of disturbing originality, on the other hand, always carries about with him an individual flavour, a personal atmosphere, that is a fascination to people of one kind of nose and palate and an abomination to those of another kind. To like Shakespeare or Bach we need to have only the ordinary elements of humanity in us; to like Debussy or Mallarmé we need to be ourselves something of Debussy or Mallarmé. It is this that accounts for the honest inability of a number of good musicians to see anything likeable in the work of men like Liszt. Unless we can see life and art at something like the same angle as he, his picture is bound to look awry. And the very freshness of eye of this type of artist, and the necessity he is under of discovering new formulæ of expression for the new things he sees, make it almost impossible for him to build enduringly. There is an inevitable stiffness in his movements that a later day will see clearly to be the result of an imperfect articulation of the joints.

But the fact that the pioneers in music do not live as long as the settlers must not blind us to the value of the work they have done. A Monteverde—and perhaps we may say the same of Debussy—is great to the fourth or fifth generation after him not so much for what he himself has done as for what he has made possible. Those who are interested in Liszt to-day can cheerfully admit that he has written much less music of the greatest kind than the leaders—such as Schumann and Brahms—of the school that swore by the antithesis of almost everything for which he strove. Liszt has realised himself in others,—in the song, as I have said, in Hugo Wolf, in the symphonic poem in Richard Strauss, and in Strauss again to a large extent in the opera, though Liszt himself was not an operatic composer. In the previous portion of this article I have tried to show that he brought into modern music a new conception of melody. In this, as in other respects, he 'threw his spear further into the future than Wagner,'—which, let me repeat, to avoid misunderstanding, is not to say that he wrote more beautiful melodies than Wagner. The latter's melody, as Dr. Albert Schweitzer has acutely pointed out in his book on Bach, is a kind of 'emanation from a chord.' He is essentially a harmonic melodist. Liszt is to a great extent a melodic melodist, so to speak: in the work of no other composer do we find so many melodies pure and simple flung out to tell their own emotional or pictorial story without the slightest help from harmony. It goes without saying that it is incomparably harder to get at once to the heart of things with an unaccompanied than with a harmonized melody, and harder still to cast it in such a form that the hearer shall at once perceive the poetic meaning of it. It is small wonder that some of Liszt's themes of this type fail to strike home to us at a first hearing. But he showed the possibility of the form, and from him has come a great deal of the poetic suggestiveness and metrical freedom of modern melody,—the melody that aims at running fluidly, contour by contour, fold by fold, close to the very body of the idea, instead of being content to balance itself symmetrically this side and that of a purely musical pivot.

As a harmonist, again, his influence on modern music is unmistakable. Wagner himself came under this influence, as he confesses in a letter to Hans von Bülow,—'Between ourselves we may freely admit that since I became acquainted with Liszt's compositions I have become quite a different fellow as regards harmony from what I was before,'—though characteristically enough he objected to Richard Pohl making public reference to 'this secret' in an article on the 'Tristan' prelude. Liszt's originality is patent to every one who knows his work as a whole; not only does he anticipate some of the most familiar harmonic progressions of Wagner and of modern music generally, but he even throws out suggestions of the new lines that harmony was later to take in the hands of Debussy. (I do not imply, of course, that the French composer derived at all directly from Liszt.) The 'Invocation,' for example (from the 'Harmonies poétiques et religieuses') is full of passages of this kind:

In the 'Bénédiction de Dieu dans la Solitude' we find similar anticipations of a characteristically Debussyan device: for instance:

In the 'Angelus' ('Années de Pèlerinage') we have a passage suggesting a whole-tone scale:

and a similar one in the 'Sursum Corda' from the same collection:

Other instances of a harmonization bolder than anything that was being attempted in the Europe of that day will recur to every student of Liszt's orchestral works.

V.

That he was an innovator in the matter of form scarcely needs to be said, but the nature and results of his innovations here deserve discussion. The symphonic poem as we have it now is Liszt's invention; and a form of art that has been so assiduously cultivated, either under this or other titles, by almost every composer of note during the past half-century, plainly answers to some deeply-rooted æsthetic necessity. The opponents of programme music of any kind would do well to remember that,—to say nothing of the past—a good deal more than half of the instrumental music now written is of this order; and commonsense decides that it is less likely that nearly all the composers in the world should suddenly have taken leave of their senses than that a few æstheticians of restricted imagination should be guilty of bad reasoning from imperfect premises. One of the queerest things in connection with musical æsthetics is that so many good souls should be apparently quite unconscious of the simple fact that a composer, like the rest of us, is a man with five senses, living in a world that acts upon all of them. It has never struck them that a composer has eyes, and that he sees interesting things with his eyes—people in joy or grief, objects in movement, and so on—that he is naturally anxious to express in his music; nay, it does not even seem to occur to them that the composer has ears, that bring him a number of impressions that again he is impelled to reproduce in tone! These æstheticians are positively surprised when they meet with a composer of this kind. In the latest edition of Grove's Dictionary, for example (art. 'Liszt'), we are told that 'it is remarkable (sic!) that he [Liszt] nearly always required a poetic idea to illustrate in his compositions'—as if composers had not been illustrating poetic ideas in music since the days of Tubal Cain. Appalled by the depravity this suggests, and willing to save Liszt's character if possible, the writer hopes—almost, it is true, against hope—that 'the process' may have been 'similar to that employed by Schumann, i.e., the music may have been composed first, and the fancy title for it found afterwards'; but 'taking all the compositions into consideration, it would seem more likely that in the great majority of instances the music was deliberately (sic!) written up to an impression produced by some other art, or by some natural scene. It was not that the imagination was defective, but it required to be kindled from without.'

FRANZ LISZT.

From a drawing from life by W. Bahr, Bordeaux, 1844 (in the possession of Mr. Alfred Littleton).

How the imagination can be kindled except 'from without,' as the very etymology of the word implies, is not explained. Here we have the crude old musical æsthetic in its crudest form. It is fitting that this moribund theory of the nature of the musical imagination should find its last resting-place in Grove's Dictionary,—the place of departed æsthetics. Need it be said that every song and every opera and every oratorio is the illustration of a poetic idea? And if a composer's brain can thus be legitimately 'kindled from without' when he writes underneath his notes the words indicating the moods or the pictures that have suggested them, why should he not give us the notes by themselves and a mere hint or summary of the words at the beginning of his score? What is the difference between Schumann telling us that his subject is 'Faust' by the device of making Faust and Marguerite sing definite words, and Liszt telling us that his subject is 'Faust' by the device of printing that word on his title-page and labelling the various sections 'Faust,' 'Gretchen,' and 'Mephistopheles'?

Many composers have set the words of the 'Ave Maria' for a solo voice with a pianoforte accompaniment. In the 'Harmonies poétiques et religieuses' Liszt writes a meditation—a little 'tone-poem'—for the pianoforte alone upon the same poetic theme, printing the words here and there to make the poetic basis quite clear to the player. What difference is there between the musical 'imagination' in the one case and in the other? Why should the one be right and the other wrong? And if Liszt's procedure in the case of the 'Ave Maria' be not wrong, then programme music, poetic music,—call it what you will,—cannot be wrong, for step by step, if space permitted, we could establish the same parallelism between the imagination of the song composer,—whose right to exist no æsthetician has yet questioned!—and that of the composer of the most extended symphonic poem. No dividing line can logically be drawn anywhere. Is not the plain fact simply this,—that the æstheticians who cannot think musically along the lines of the symphonic poem are people to whom nature has denied a certain kind of musical imagination that composers of the 'poetic' order possess—the faculty of taking up impressions from the outer world, converting them into music, and giving them a tonal form and substance in which those of us who have that kind of imagination can perceive their congruity with their originals? The outcry against the Lisztian conception of programme music is thus a mere attempt on the part of those to whom nature has been parsimonious to set limits to those to whom nature has been more bountiful. It is the censure of the old maid upon marriage, of the blind upon seeing, of the deaf upon hearing, of the man with one leg upon those who go about upon two.

Once we see that the question of absolute music and programme music is simply a question of different orders of the musical imagination we must recognise that neither of these forms can claim that it, and it alone, is 'true' music. If one composer's mind is set working by a vision of the potentialities of a theme for variation, and another's by the contemplation of two lovers, or the idea of death, or the beauty of a forest, there is no reason why each should not follow his own bent. But it needs to be insisted on that programme music is neither an interloper nor a pariah. As Wagner put it in his essay 'On Franz Liszt's Symphonic Poems,' are not the deeds and sufferings of an Orpheus or a Prometheus at least as worthy subjects for music as the march and dance and the connotations of these? And given the autonomy of the musico-poetic imagination in its own sphere, its right to choose its own forms can no longer be questioned. As Liszt so pertinently urged both in his book on Chopin and in that on 'Berlioz and his Harold Symphony,' in music as elsewhere the idea must be allowed to make its own form. There is no such thing as 'form' in the sense in which that term is used in the average text-book; there are merely 'forms.' What the text-books call form is simply an analysis, after the event, of the lines of balance and design upon which a certain composition, or a number of compositions designed upon the same principle and dealing with the same order of ideas, can be seen to be constructed. This 'form' is no more valid for compositions based upon other principles and other ideas than the form of a man is valid for a dog, or the form of an oak for a birch. Form is not a cause of articulation in any organism—man, building, political constitution, or tree; it is merely our name for an observed system of articulation. Each organism, if left alone, will instinctively make for the form that best suits its own forces. Neither sonata nor any other 'form' can claim any absolute rights in music. A good cradle song, or the Prelude to 'Tristan,' is as perfect in form—its own form—as the C minor Symphony. All condemnation, then, of works like Liszt's symphonic poems, or his pianoforte sonata, because they are not 'developed' on the lines that suit works of a more abstract character, such as the third Symphony of Brahms, is quite beside the mark.

In the Liszt article in 'Grove' it is alleged that 'the system of transformation of themes, as [Liszt] called it, is beyond question an easier thing to handle than the logical development which the older masters preferred.' Passing over the unwarranted implication that the Lisztian system of 'transformation' cannot be as logical as the classical system of development, some of us would maintain that the whole statement is an error. It seems to us that good development of the musico-poetic kind is much harder, and therefore rarer, than good development of the older kind. In the latter the problem is fairly simple; you have only to evolve new and interesting shapes out of a given piece of material. The Lisztian problem is as much more difficult than this as driving a team of horses is harder than driving one; you have both to evolve new material out of the old and to advance your story or extend your picture at the same pace; if the one outstrips or fails to work with the other,—if the music develops purely on its own account, without regard to the poetic subject, or if it merely illustrates 'moments' in that subject without weaving a continuous and logical musical tissue,—it is bad art. Roughly speaking, the one kind of music is based on decorative principles, the other on psychological; and while the rules of procedure for a decorative and for a psychological art can never be the same throughout, the practice of the latter must surely be the harder of the two. In absolute music, contrast, repetition, evolution and so on are used for their own sake; in psychological or suggestive music they have to be motivated by the vicissitudes of the poetic theme and yet have a nonchalant air of following no compulsion but their own. Hence the difficulty the symphonic-poem writer has of finding themes capable of a purely musical development that shall be at the same time invariably apposite to the various stages of the poetic idea. Critics of Liszt's 'form' would do well to remember that perfect form is extremely rare even in the great classical writers. All really good form has the air of an improvisation, like a flower or a crystal; the moment you can detect the joins in a piece of music, or see the reflective, deliberate processes by which a given section of it has been built up, all illusion as to its being an organic growth necessarily vanishes. The opponents of Liszt and of the school of programme writers that has developed from him have hitherto had too unquestioned a say on these matters. No impartial student of Liszt will deny that he is often in serious difficulties with his building. But if some one, instead of accepting blindly all that is said about 'classical form' and its practitioners, were to play the devil's advocate and subject it and them to a searching and unsympathetic examination, what havoc he could play with them! Wagner long ago showed how Beethoven's repetition of the first part of the great 'Leonora No. 3' overture after the middle section—out of thoughtless loyalty to the current 'form'—takes much of the dramatic point out of the work. A quite unprejudiced eye can detect numberless instances of mechanical jointing in Beethoven, due to his working, at a certain stage of a sonata or symphony, on a plan settled by tradition, instead of letting his imagination run without constraint. Look, for instance, in the first movement of the 'Les adieux, l'absence, et le retour' sonata, at the clumsy and meaningless beating about the bush just after the repeat. The thought or the mood of the work is not being advanced one whit by all this twiddling; Beethoven is simply marking time until he can get into his swing again. So with Brahms, the 'faultless master of form.' Take the first movement of his second Symphony, and look at the passage commencing with the horns in the fifth measure after the double bar, and extending for some forty measures, to the fortissimo in the full orchestra. What is this but a mere text-book exercise in the variation of a given thematic fragment, a thing as easy to do as twisting a Panama hat into one shape after another? Like Beethoven in the case I have cited, Brahms is here a mere mechanician; he is simply treading water until he can find courage to plunge and swim again, simply 'talking through his hat,' as the proletariat would put it, to keep our attention occupied until he can think of something really vital to say.*

Two blacks, of course, do not make a white, and any number of examples of bad building in Beethoven or Brahms would not turn some of Liszt's obvious faults into virtues; but before we condemn him for often failing as a movement-builder we need to remember that the law by which he is tried is itself imperfect, and the judges who administer it are often very fallible even where they are not wilfully blind.

LISZTIANA.

It is a matter for regret that the entourage of Liszt did not include a Boswell. A veritable and unvarnished record of the great and small talk of such a man would have been of absorbing interest. We have, it is true, a good deal recorded of Liszt's views of many of his contemporaries, and these views reveal a generosity and appreciation probably unparalleled in musical history; for as a general rule musicians even of the first rank are apt to be severe upon one another. But of Liszt's familiar unbuttoned small-talk very little is known. This being so, we hope we may venture to offer a small contribution to the fund apropos the distinguished musician's last sojourn in London in 1886, the year of his death. All that is set down is derived at first hand from one who was in constant contact with him during his memorable visit.

In 1884 Messrs. Novello & Co. were asked by an American society to publish an English edition of Liszt's 'St. Elisabeth.' There was then no International copyright agreement to stand in the * Experience has taught me that one has only to offer a word of criticism of Brahms to be called an anti-Brahmsian in some quarters. May I therefore say that I am a Brahmsian, but in the sense that I am a Wagnerian, a Beethovenian, or a Shakespearian—that is, I think them all very great men, but no more immune to an occasional disrespectful word—when they deserve it—than the equator.

way, and anyone in this country could print and publish German music as he chose. But the late Mr. Henry Littleton, the head of the firm of Novello & Co., was unwilling to take advantage of this situation, and offered Liszt £50 to revise the proofs. This he consented to do, but so well was the work prepared that the proofs came back without a correction. This led to a proposal to perform the work in London, in April, 1886, and a warm invitation was sent to Liszt to be present.

The following is the letter in which he accepted this invitation:

SEHR GEEHRTER HERR,—Nach vierzig Jahren, werde ich also nach London wieder kommen: Dafür sage ich unsern vortrefflichen Freund Walter Bache, und Ihnen, verbindlichen Dank. #### TRANSLATION.

DEAR SIR,—So after forty years I am coming to London again: for this I offer my grateful thanks to our excellent friend Walter Bache, and to you. If the performance of 'Elisabeth' takes place on April 6, I will arrive a few days earlier. Arrange the date of the performance with Mackenzie as you please: when that is settled his journey will be arranged accordingly by—

F. LISZT.

October 14,

85—Weimar.

I accept with thanks the kind hospitality offered at Villa Sydenham, with Novellos.

Liszt travelled on April 3. A large party of guests had been invited to receive him, and in order that he might arrive in time for the reception the railway authorities were prevailed upon to stop the mail train at Penge, a wayside station within easy reach of Westwood House. Sir Augustus Harris, of Drury Lane fame, who was present, was lost in admiration and envy at this excellent piece of stage-management. The Hungarian colony in London had determined to present an address to their great countryman, and had arranged to be at Victoria Station (the London terminus). But somehow they were made aware of the change of plan, and they happily found their way to Penge in time to pay their tribute to Hungarian genius. When Liszt arrived at the house and found many guests assembled, he was with very great difficulty prevailed upon to take a meal he sorely needed, because he was so anxious not to keep the company waiting.

During one of his conversations at Sydenham Liszt said that on the occasion of his first visit to London, he was accompanied by his father, whose great anxiety was that Liszt should seek a career in the diplomatic service. Liszt stated that his father took him to a phrenologist and inquired what he was to do 'with this stupid boy.' The phrenologist examined Liszt's bumps, and said, 'Not such a very stupid boy, try him with music.' Thus was phrenology justified, or was it a case of knowing beforehand?

The natural desire of all who thronged to the numerous public and private receptions held in Liszt's honour during his stay was to hear him play. But he rarely felt disposed to exhibit his powers, notwithstanding many artless and some subtle efforts on the part of admirers. On one occasion, at the invitation of Sir (then Mr.) Henry Irving, he attended a performance of 'Faust' (the dramatised version by Hermann Merivale) at the Lyceum Theatre, then in its glorious days of Irving and Ellen Terry. After the performance, which Liszt enjoyed intensely, he and the party went to supper with Irving in the neighbouring Beefsteak Club-room, and there, as an expression of the hope that springs eternal in the human breast, was a brand new Broadwood grand, all ready for manipulation. But Liszt had a blind eye when convenient. He took the supper, but not the hint. The sequel, however, was full atonement. Irving was asked to meet Liszt at Westwood House on the following Sunday. But he remembered many pressing engagements and excused himself. Later Liszt asked his host to tell Irving that if he and Ellen Terry would come on Sunday, he would play to them as much as they liked. This was irresistible, and Irving's engagements elsewhere suddenly became relatively unimportant and he accepted. Liszt played as only he could play. Irving had no claim to musicianship, but it was observed that the tears were rolling down his cheeks. The two great men could not exchange ideas in spoken language, but their spirits could commune through music.

With our last issue we gave a portrait of Liszt, reproduced from a photograph taken by Augustus Littleton at Westwood House. While Liszt was sitting for this photograph a note was handed to him, and when he had grasped its contents he put his tongue out in a defiant mood. It was an invitation to lunch from a titled person. He said 'No! No! I will not go. These aristocrats only invite me because they want the old poodle to play. I prefer to have a cutlet at home.' But when it was explained that the Baroness who wrote was the Miss Burdett Coutts, he exclaimed: 'O yes! yes! I will go.'

The Prince and Princess of Wales attended the performance of 'St. Elisabeth' on April 6. After their reception their Royal Highnesses were asked whether Liszt might be brought to them during the interval. The answer of the Prince was: 'No, I will come to him.' This the Prince did, and in the ante-room conversed with Liszt for some time. Then he said: 'I wish to introduce my wife, my sister (Princess Louise), and my sister-in-law (the Duchess of Edinburgh),' and they proceeded to the auditorium, where the three Princesses were seated. The royal ladies all immediately stood up and talked to the composer. A striking public tribute of respect!

A visit was made to one of the select concerts given at St. James's Hall by the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society. There were present the Prince of Wales (later King Edward), the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Edinburgh. Liszt sat with their Royal Highnesses. A pianoforte was in tempting readiness on the platform, but in vain was the net spread in the sight of such a knowing bird. Liszt was warmly urged by the audience (which consisted only of gentlemen) to play, but to the great amusement of the Royal party he merely stood by the pianoforte and bowed. On the way home he remarked that he did not care to play to all those men, but that on the following Sunday, when he was to dine at Marlborough House with the Prince and Princess of Wales, he would play to the Princess and the other ladies.

As already stated it was designed that Liszt's oratorio 'St. Elisabeth' should be performed during his visit. On an evening which happened to be one of the rehearsal nights of the Novello Choir, organized for the performance and conducted by Mr. (now Sir) Alexander Mackenzie, Liszt had been dining in town with his bosom friend, Mr. Walter Bache, and it was suggested that he should visit the rehearsal which was being held at Store Street Music Hall. This he agreed to do, and the choir and conductor were duly warned. A series of distance signals was arranged in order that when the composer arrived he should be greeted by the jubilant finale from his oratorio. He received a tremendous ovation, after which he said, 'What can I do? I cannot speak to them, I must play to them': and to the joy of all present he sat down at the pianoforte used for accompanying and for the first time since his arrival exhibited his marvellous powers.

When Liszt arrived at Dover on his way home, the Mayor and Corporation of that town presented him with an address. That this courtesy and mark of respect to a great man came spontaneously from the Municipal authorities of an English provincial town, is a lasting credit to their discernment. We regret we are not able to record the name of the enlightened Mayor who thus honoured himself and his town in honouring Liszt and musical art.

Liszt's last words, uttered in the train at Calais, were: 'If I live another "paar Jahren" I shall come back.' But, alas, this was not to be! When the news of Liszt's death at Bayreuth, on July 31, 1886, reached England, Mr. Alfred Littleton at once telegraphed to Queen Victoria and the Prince and Princess of Wales. Sympathetic replies were received, and later a message came from the Queen to ask Mr. Littleton to purchase a wreath and place it on Liszt's grave at Bayreuth on Her Majesty's behalf. This request, of course, was fulfilled.

A BEETHOVEN HOAX?

By ERNEST NEWMAN.

A few weeks ago Die Musik fluttered us all with an article by Herr Paul Bekker in which he announced the discovery of a hitherto unknown Beethoven letter. This was printed in full in the article, and a facsimile of it was given. It is dated simply '8 July, afternoon,' and signed 'Ludwig.' It begins, 'Dearest one—My letter has gone, I posted it yesterday'; and goes on to speak of his anguish at being separated from his beloved, of the prejudice of her proud family against him, and so on. Then he writes 'Ah! could I tell you in tones how you are my all-in-all—it would be easier for me—Not a bad theme occurred to me: it begins thus*:

Now the famous 'Unsterbliche Geliebte' letters, on the problem of which I wrote at some length in the Musical Times for June of this year, are dated '6 July in the morning,' 'Monday evening, 6 July,' and 'Good morning on July 7.' In the second and third of the letters Beethoven speaks with some uncertainty and anxiety about the posts. Herr Bekker contends that the date of the new letter, '8 July, afternoon,' and the remark 'My letter has gone, I posted it yesterday,' make it practically certain that the new letter is the fourth of the same chain; this conclusion, he says, can only be upset by the discovery of another love-letter of the 7th July in some other year, for it is incredible that the contents of a letter of 8th July in one year should form so logical a sequel to those of a letter of 7th July in quite another year. The musical quotation is a theme from the finale of Beethoven's string Quintet, Op. 29, which work, according to the composer's own note in the autograph, was written in 1801. As the 6th July was a Monday in the year 1801, that seems a further confirmation of the old theory that the 'Unsterbliche Geliebte' episode belongs to that year, in which case, of course, the 'Geliebte' must have been the youthful Countess Giulietta Guicciardi. We know that her family were set against her marriage with Beethoven; and Herr Bekker points triumphantly to the reference in the new letter to the opposition of her 'proud relations.' Altogether the case, at first sight, looks so beautifully complete that it is no wonder a good many journalists accepted it almost unquestioningly, as did the Manchester Guardian, for example, in an amusingly precipitate article that finished up thus:

Music-lovers will still regard the 'Moonlight Sonata' as the worthiest and most convincing musical pledge of Beethoven's love for Giulietta Guicciardi. And assuming that the newly found letter is authentic, we may now from its evidence and from that of the score of the quintet—which gives, in Beethoven's handwriting, 1801 as the time of its composition—accept as true the popular tradition that she and none other was Beethoven's 'unsterbliche Geliebte.'

In the good people who write like this the wish is evidently father to the thought. The popular idea is that Beethoven, consumed with love for Giulietta, rushed home one evening and began to pour out his whole soul in the 'Moonlight Sonata.' With the moonlight streaming in through the windows he dashes off the first movement in a white heat. Reviving his tired tissues with a cup of strong coffee, let us suppose, he finishes the second movement, the moonlight still streaming in. He is on the point of collapse in the third movement, but a wet towel round his fevered brow enables him to endure to the end. Then, as the moonlight is just vanishing before the oncoming dawn, he rushes off to Giulietta's house with the score. 'See, Giulietta, a Sonata! My Sonata! Thy Sonata! Our Sonata! Ewig dein! Ewig mein! Herzliebste! Mon ange! Mon trésor!' and so on and so on, with his usual polyglot incoherence. But alas for the lovers of sentimental romance, the plain facts offer no basis for this gigantic column of moonshine. Beethoven did not write the 'Moonlight Sonata' for Giulietta; the dedication to her was an afterthought and, indeed, a makeshift. He had originally inscribed to her the Rondo in G. When he found that Countess Lichnowsky was expecting a work to be dedicated to her, he begged the Rondo back from Giulietta and gave her the Sonata by way of compensation. Moreover, from a letter of November 10, 1819, addressed to Beethoven by Dr. G. L. Grosheim, it looks as if the Sonata had been, in part at least, inspired by Seumes's poem 'Die Beterin,' which describes a girl praying at the altar for the recovery of her dying father. The music of the first movement at any rate is much more congruous with this poetic idea than with that of a love-confession. Even before this letter of Grosheim's was given to the world, the opening Adagio had struck many people as a prayer for grace; it had even been arranged by Bierey as a 'Kyrie eleison' for voice and orchestra.

The Manchester Guardian article is a sample of the way in which the old sentiment about Giulietta Guicciardi still makes people too credulous towards any evidence that seems to support the theory that she was Beethoven's 'immortal Beloved.' Putting sentiment aside, what is the total evidential value of the new letter? Very little, I fear. In the first place, the way in which it has been given to the world is most unsatisfactory. We are not told where it has been all this time. We are not even told in whose hands it now is. Herr Bekker simply says that it was 'shown him' by Herr Bernhard Schuster, the editor of Die Musik.* A first glance at the facsimile and at those of the genuine 'unsterbliche Geliebte' letters is enough to raise the suspicion that the new 'discovery' is a forgery. The character of the handwriting is so different in certain vital characteristics from that of the letter of July 7, that it seems to me highly improbable that Beethoven's script could change so radically in a single night. Of course it may be replied that this is a testimony in its favour, as a forger would presumably have taken more care to copy the writing of the genuine letters. But to admit this principle would lead us ultimately to the absurd conclusion that the very clumsiness of a forgery is a partial proof of its authenticity. Until other facsimiles shall be published showing a similar fundamental transformation of Beethoven's script in two successive days, I prefer to believe that, whether the new letter be genuine or a forgery, it can hardly have been written twenty-four hours after the last of the letters we already knew.

But there are other considerations. Suppose the letter to be genuine, that it dates from 1801, and that it is addressed to Giulietta Guicciardi. Does that prove that the other letters were also addressed to her, and that they also belong to 1801? Not in the least. As I showed in my previous article, practically all the evidence points to their being written in 1812. In 1801 Beethoven would be only thirty-one. Why should he speak of needing a quiet, steady life 'at my age'? Would he not be far more likely to say that when he was forty-two? At virtually every point the contents of the letters confirm the theory that they date from 1812. The fact that Beethoven was in Teplitz on those very days, that K almost certainly stands for Karlsbad, the recent confirmation, from an old guide-book, of what he says as to the posts, the fact that the summer of 1812 was an exceptionally wet one,—all this is not lightly to be brushed aside. There are the further facts that the style of the script is that of Beethoven's middle period, and that one passage in them curiously duplicates a passage in a letter dated July 17, 1812.

On the other hand, where and what is the evidence for 1801? No one can show even that Beethoven visited a watering-place in July of that year. Most modern commentators would agree that the letter to Wegeler that was formerly assigned to June 29, 1800, was really written on June 29, 1801. It is plainly connected in the closest possible way with the letter to Wegeler of November 16, 1801. In the first, Beethoven gives an account of his bodily troubles and the treatment he is adopting. In the second he continues the same subject in response to further inquiries from Wegeler. The details of the two letters place it beyond all probability that seventeen months should have elapsed between them. But the assignment of the earlier letter to June 29, 1801, puts out of court the assumption that Beethoven was in a watering-place in the early days of July. Moreover, in neither of the letters does he speak either of going to a watering-place or of having come from one, though he gives most copious details of his malady and the treatment, which evidently includes medicated baths at home. Herr Bekker himself admits that Kalischer's ascription of the letter of November 16 to 1800, is an error, and that it belongs to 1801. But in this case how can we square the physical weariness of the 'unsterbliche Geliebte' letter of July 7,—as shown in such a remark as 'at my age I need a quiet, steady life,'—with the exultant sense of physical strength (in spite of all his stomach troubles) that breathes through the letter of November 16, 1801? 'My youth,' he writes, 'yes, I feel it, is only now beginning; have I not always been sickly? My strength, both of body and mind, for some time has been on the increase. . . . Don't talk of rest! I know of no other than sleep, and sorry enough am I that I am compelled to give more time to it than formerly. . . . I will seize fate by the throat; it shall certainly never wholly overcome me. Oh! life is so beautiful; would I could have a thousand lives! I feel I am no longer fit to lead a quiet life.' If it be urged that this is not inconsistent with his being a little weary of life in the preceding July—his health, let us suppose, having improved in the meantime—the reply to that is that the letter of June 29 indicates that though he is miserable on account of his deafness and his stomach ailments, he is full enough of general vitality. So far from wanting to settle down 'at his age' into a quieter life, he proudly tells Wegeler of his success with the publishers, and the rate at which he is working for them. 'For every work I have six, seven publishers, and if I choose, even more. They do not bargain with me; I demand and they pay. . . . I only live in my music, and I have scarcely begun one thing when I start on another. As I am now working, I am often engaged on three or four things at the same time.' There is no suggestion of lassitude or failing vitality here.

On every line, then, the evidence points to 1812, not 1801, as the year of the 'unsterbliche Geliebte' letters. But Beethoven certainly was in love with Giulietta Guicciardi in 1801. Can we then not accept the new letter as referring to this episode—dissociating it wholly from the Thérèse von Brunsvik affair of 1812? That would seem the most rational solution of the difficulty—but for one thing. Supposing a forger were anxious to establish the Giulietta theory of 1801, in face of all the evidence for Thérèse von Brunsvik and 1812, what would he do?

If I were the forger, I should say to myself something of this kind: 'I must first of all make it clear that the letter is written to Giulietta; so, as the aristocratic Guicciardi family is known to have been against the marriage of Beethoven and the young Countess, I shall introduce a reference to 'proud relations.' As the genuine letters are dated 6th and 7th July, I must date mine the 8th, and introduce a line or two referring to the fact that a letter has been sent the previous day—'My letter has gone—I posted it yesterday'; or something of that sort. But above all I must establish 1801 as the date of the new letter, and consequently of the old ones. How can I best do this? By quoting a theme from one of Beethoven's works of about that period, and making him say it has just occurred to him. On second thoughts, however, it would be as well not to leave the smallest loophole for any more controversy. Hadn't I better find some work that has been dated by Beethoven himself, and quote from that? Ah, here is the very thing; the Op. 29 Quintet, the score of which states, in the composer's autograph, that it was written in 1801.' All these extremely convenient points occur in the new letter. Is it not a little remarkable that, after penning the three letters of 6th and 7th July, the vaguenesses and omissions of which have given so much trouble to the commentators, Beethoven should have written on the very next day a letter that providentially clears up every one of the points of dispute? And is it not remarkable that this letter should have been lost to the world until now, when the theory that the 'unsterbliche Geliebte' was Giulietta Guicciardi is on its last legs,—and that the present possessor of the letter should be a man of so retiring a disposition that he will not even allow his name to be known, still less say where he got the letter from or submit it to public inspection? How strange it is that Beethoven and nature between them should have provided, in the letter of July 8 and the circumstances of its discovery, for everything that a forger or a hoaxer would have thought of! To me the fullness and the patness of the new letter for just what it is being used to prove are a trifle suspicious. I would not yet go so far as to say it is a forgery, but I shall require some irrefragable evidence before I accept it as genuine. Above all, the paper and the handwriting should be minutely examined by German experts. Herr Bekker airily waives all this aside; such an examination, he thinks, 'would not be uninteresting,' but he will not trouble about it himself. A critical study of the script of the new letter would not merely be 'not uninteresting'; it is the first thing that ought to be taken in hand.

I had got thus far when the post brought me the 'Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft,' with the article of Herr Leitzmann to which I have already referred in a footnote. Herr Leitzmann has compared the facsimile of the letter with those of others of Beethoven, and is strongly of the opinion that it is a forgery. One of the best of his points is that the use of 'tz' in words like 'allerletzt'—which occurs on page 2, line 4, of the new letter—was not customary in Beethoven's day, and that in his genuine letters the composer always spells 'allerlezt,' 'jezt,' 'hinaussetzen,' 'gesetzt,' 'troz,' &c. The infinitive of 'to be' he elsewhere always spells 'seyn,' not 'sein' as in the letter (p. 2, line 16). A still closer examination would perhaps reveal other oddities; but meanwhile Herr Leitzmann is perfectly justified in asking whether it is credible that in one letter Beethoven should suddenly employ a number of singularities of script and of spelling that appear nowhere else in his genuine correspondence. Herr Leitzmann has also one or two acute remarks on the subject of the citation from the quintet. The fact that we possess no sketches of it indicates that it must have been conceived and sketched earlier than the year 1801, for Beethoven never threw off his works with one sweep of the hand. Further, 'Beethoven very seldom incorporated the themes of his sketches in the final work without altering them.' He writes the theme in the letter in the violin clef, which, apparently, is contrary to his practice in making sketches. Finally he adds a chord to the theme, which has a decided look of improbability. I am glad to see Herr Leitzmann refer to this point, for it had already struck me that the theme as it is quoted in the letter had every appearance of being copied from the completed score of the quintet, instead of being the usual Beethovenian hint of a subject. Altogether the gravest suspicion rests upon the letter. If those who stand sponsors to it have any proof of its authenticity, they should give it us at once. Till then,—to put it as gently as possible,—we shall not take it seriously.

Occasional Notes.

We are asked to quote the following from the Musical News:

'The suggestion has been made that in this centenary year of the house of Novello it would be a graceful thing to offer a complimentary banquet to Mr. Alfred Littleton and his partners. What during its long career the notable firm has done for the art of music in England and the colonies, how Vincent Novello a century ago materially helped to cheapen music, to popularise choral music among the people, and to provide sacred vocal music for our churches, is a tale which has already inspired a small historical volume. And there is another reason why just at this time a public musical recognition may well be accorded to the present members of the old house. Not a little of the marked success which attended the recent gathering of the International Musical Congress in London is due to the valuable aid and hospitality shown at the headquarters of the firm at their new premises in Wardour Street. The Council Meetings and all the multifarious business were conducted there. Messrs. Littleton subscribed a large sum to the Guarantee Fund, and inaugurated the proceedings by a splendid Reception offered to our foreign guests and the English members of the Society.

'The idea of recognising these services has been heartily taken up by the leaders of the profession and several prominent amateurs. Among these are Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Sir George Martin, Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Frederic Cowen, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Sir Edward Elgar, Dr. Harford Lloyd, Professor Joseph C. Bridge, Dr. W. G. Alcock, Dr. W. Carroll, Professor Granville Bantock, Dr. Davan Wetton, Dr. Eaton Fanning, Lieut. Albert Williams, F. Corder, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Sir Homewood Crawford, J. F. R. Stainer, Sir Ernest Clarke, J. C. Collard, Dr. J. Varley Roberts, Dr. R. R. Terry, J. H. Maunder, C. Rube, Dr. Haydn Keeton, Dr. C. A. E. Harriss, Prof. F. Niecks, Dr. H. P. Allen, J. Barker, J. Percy Baker, and several others.

'It so happens that this year Mr. Alfred Littleton enjoys the distinction of being Master of the ancient City Guild the Worshipful Company of Musicians.

'Sir Frederick Bridge, by request, has called a Meeting to arrange what shall be done. This will be held at the Music Room, Westminster Abbey Cloisters, on Monday, October 30, at 4.30, when the attendance is requested of those desiring to support the proposition. In the meanwhile, Dr. J. E. Borland, 81, Bromley Road, Catford; Dr. E. Markham Lee, 'Riffel,' Glengall Road, Woodford Green; and Dr. T. Lea Southgate, 19, Manor Park, Lee, S.E. have consented to act as honorary secretaries. Names of those wishing to join the General Committee may be sent to these gentlemen in advance.'

We have been informed that since the above was printed a great many more names have been received, including the Rt. Hon. Sir T. Veyer Strong, Mr. Landon Ronald, Dr. Sinclair, Mr. Ivor Atkins, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Alderman E. E. Cooper, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, Sir William Lancaster, Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, Mr. W. Barclay Squire, Colonel A. G. Balfour, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Herbert Sullivan, Mr. Ben Davies.

Mr. Ernst Denhof—to whom music-lovers in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Leeds and Manchester are indebted and, there is good reason to think, grateful for their first experience of a stage performance of 'Der Ring des Nibelungen'—has formulated a similar scheme for provincial representations of 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'The Flying Dutchman,' 'Elektra,' and 'Orpheus.' He proposes to produce these works in Liverpool, Manchester, Hull, Leeds, Glasgow and Edinburgh in a season extending from February 26 to April 6, 1912. In each town the initiation of the scheme waits upon the establishment of an adequate fund and guarantee. Mr. Denhof's circular proposes that supporters should range themselves under three heads:

Subscribers would have no other obligation than to take up their seats on a given date not later than one month before the first performance in each city.

Guarantors would be called upon only in the event of any loss occurring out of the enterprise, the obligation then being pro rata.

Shareholders would have to provide the necessary capital or part thereof for the preliminary expenses, amounting to about £800 in each city, and would participate in the profit up to 5 per cent. on the capital subscribed. There would be 80 shares at £10 each, or optional, 160 at £5 each; one-third of which amount to be paid in before 1st December, and the other two-thirds not later than 1st February, and the full amount would be repaid at the end of the season unless there be a loss, which would be pro rata. Under no circumstances, however, will shareholders be called upon to pay anything beyond the amount of their shares.

These three modes of support are quite independent of each other, the public being free to choose the one most convenient to them. Each town supports only its own scheme, not those of others, the subscribed money remaining in the control of Messrs. Forsyth Brothers, Ltd., 126, Deansgate, Manchester.

We earnestly hope that a ready response will be forthcoming to Mr. Denhof's offer, for it is well-known that the artistic side of his scheme is on the highest level that circumstances permit.

Mr. Francesco Berger has resigned the post of honorary secretary to the Philharmonic Society. Few living musicians can claim so long a connection with this historic body. Mr. Berger became an associate in 1859, a member in 1871, a director in 1880, and honorary secretary in 1884. Although he will now be relieved of the onerous duties of the secretaryship, it may be hoped that his interest in the Society will be unabated, and that his great experience will continue to be of service.

César Franck's oratorios, now very great favourites in Paris, are specially cultivated by the 'Association des Concerts Spirituels de la Sorbonne.' Last winter they performed his 'Rebecca,' 'Grand Mass,' and 'Rédemption.' Of the present season, five concerts will be devoted entirely to his works, including the above-named, and also 'Ruth' and the 'Beatitudes.' Consequently less attention will be given to established works, of which, only 'Messiah,' Bach's 'Easter' oratorio, a cantata of Bach's, Beethoven's Mass in C and 'Mount of Olives,' and Wagner's Grail-scene from 'Parsifal' are announced. Last season, in addition to the same classics, the Society gave also Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and 'Passion' according to St. John, and Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' besides works by Debussy and Grandval. The 'Société Handel' got up several grand performances of 'Messiah' last year at Easter. Whatever will the anti-Handel party among ourselves say to all this appreciation in Paris?

No series of chamber concerts given in London is more fruitful of artistic results than the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts. At practically every concert a prominent quartet party or soloist appears, and the programmes are always of the highest quality and devised in an interesting manner. The twenty-five concerts given last season included, for instance, programmes devoted to Schumann, Schubert, Richard Strauss, Beethoven, and Brahms, modern France (Debussy's quartet and César Franck's Pianoforte quintet), and two to modern British works (including chamber music by Dan Boyes, Alice Verne-Bredt, Holbrooke, Walthew, Edith Swepstone and Friskin). The report from which this information is taken says of one of the other programmes:

An unusual concert included Walford Davies' Six Pastorals for four voices, string quartet, and pianoforte; Walthew's three vocal Quartets; five numbers from Schumann's 'Spanisches Liederspiel'; Ernest Walker's five songs from 'England's Helicon'; and Jadassohn's Sextet for pianoforte duet and string quartet.

Another paragraph contains matter of vital importance to the welfare of the scheme:

Considerable difficulty was experienced during the season in respect of the finances, and it was therefore most fortunate that the final concert was unusually successful in every way. Miss Marie Brema, who generously sang twelve songs, was received with much enthusiasm, and the interest of the instrumental side of the programme was well maintained by Dr. Ernest Walker's beautiful Quintet for horn and strings, and Schubert's glorious Octet. The deficit, which had grown to considerable proportions, was reduced to £3 18s. 7d. (a moderate amount); but the committee would again point out that no deficits should ever be allowed to arise, and would not, if each and every member of the audience would contribute fairly to the collections.

We hope supporters will take the hint.

THE DRESDEN AMEN.

BY CECIL BARBER.

I have heard it said that the character of a Church Service may be accurately gauged by the way in which the Amens are sung. I will go further and assert that the Amens themselves tell their own tale of the spirit which animates the whole. Not only the ordinary plagal or authentic cadences that follow the prayers, but the two-fold, three-fold, and four-fold Amens that are commonly used to mark some consummation devoutly to be wished.

The question of a special musical So-be-it for such salient points of public worship as the end of the Prayer of Consecration in the Communion Service, or the close of a Festal Evensong, is one that exercises the minds of most, if not all, imaginative choirmasters. It is difficult to find an Amen of this kind which preserves an accurate balance of head and heart, and does not get stale through repetition. On the one hand there is the danger of formality, on the other that of sentimentality; and as to which of these is the less evil—well, perhaps restraint is preferable to emotionalism in an Anglican use.

Sometimes the addition of a seventh to the customary authentic cadence is considered sufficient emphasis, especially if the Amen be prolonged; but here again one may be opening the flood-gates of a sentiment not in accord with the best type of Church music. Greatly daring, some choirs try Stainer's

Seven-fold Amen (which, be it noted, was designed for the Communion Office alone); but if it is, as so often happens, beyond their compass, how grievous is the result! In the words of Macbeth, one feels inclined to exclaim:

I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stuck in my throat. . . .

Yet there is a simple (I do not say easy) way out of the difficulty, and a most effective one too, which I wonder is not oftener realised. For why not take advantage of that marvellous recurring-decimal of music—the 'Dresden' Amen? In its most serviceable form it may be written thus:

But even in this shape it needs care and constant practice, if the most is to be made of its possibilities. A good standard is set in several of the cathedrals already; but my appeal is addressed to the smaller churches.

The slow tempo (which can scarcely be too slow); the gradual crescendo on that unique ladder of sixths, and the subsequent diminuendo on the final chord, which should be held lunga: all this taxes the resources of all voices, but particularly of the boys. But if it is done at all decently, the Amen sounds magnificent—there is no other word, notably after a spoken Benediction. It also fits in well with a choral celebration when Marbecke's incomparable noting is the order of the day; and in a little Mission Church, where I was mainly responsible for the music for a time, the children loved it and joined in con elevazione.

The phrase as it stands is almost without parallel as a multum in parvo in music, and yet its extraordinary power may be directly traced to such technical details as the unusual disposition of the elementary harmony—the third of the opening chords low down in the tenor part, and the inconclusiveness of the half-close on which the Amen rests, as it were, in a state of suspended animation or deferred finality. In some cases the basses are made to sing in thirds in the second and third bars; but this is apt to have a muddy effect unless very delicately treated, and it is not an indispensable feature.

There is nothing more curious in the history of the art than the fascination which this simple strain has exerted on the minds of musicians since it was first discovered. In the guise in which I have already given it, it is practically note for note identical with a response taken from the Zittau Choir Book:

And this, it is true, has some affinity with the use to which Sir Charles Stanford puts it in his famous B flat Service. That youthful exploitation of the Dresden Use remains among his finest achievements still, and in one instance (as is well known) he boldly transcribes it in his own inimitable way for the people's answer in the Sursum Corda, thereby in a flash disclosing the very essence of the Amen. For could anything be more appropriate to the spirit of the words than this?—

Even closer to the Zittau extract is the version which appears in Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony, where the response seems to have been lifted bodily into that familiar work. The illustration, moreover, shows how deftly it is turned into an orchestral figure, and what characteristically light hands this composer laid on it:

And with 'Ein' Feste Burg' and Brahms's 'Triumphlied' in one's mind, one might almost say that D major is the 'Reformation' key.

But it is significant, and in itself a remarkable tribute to the all-embracing character of the 'Dresden' Amen, that such a phrase should have appealed with equal intimacy to so many different schools of thought and practice. Wagner, for instance, with all his love of colour, never won free from his prepossession for it all his life. I must suppose that in those impressionable days he spent in Dresden, the services at the Hofkirche had as much attraction for him almost as the Opera House. Even in that early opera of his, never heard now—'Das Liebesverbot'—a choir of nuns chant the following hymn to the Virgin:

A similar rhythm throbs, too, in the grave, resounding adaptation with which the pardon of the erring minstrel in 'Tannhäuser' is announced:

and last, in 'Parsifal,' the Holy Grail can almost be seen to glow through this shekinah-like version:

which might go on modulating for ever, so mystical is the effect of that climbing cadence, for it seems to recede into a rarer, serener atmosphere each time it is repeated.

We are indebted to Dr. George Bennett, the Lincoln organist, for pressing this theme from 'Parsifal' into the service of the English Church in the measured strain here subjoined:

which is also arranged, I fancy, for male voices exclusively. How well the unaccompanied singing by a highly-trained choir harmonizes with the vaulted and traceried glories of an 'Angel choir,' I leave those who have heard it to testify. Stainer also edited the Amen for use in St. Paul's Cathedral, and there is something of the reticence and strength of the Wren masterpiece in this sturdy transformation:

But such a quest as this—chiefly through the agency of Messrs. Novello, from whose publications the illustrations I give are mainly selected—is endless, so numerous are the metamorphoses of this elemental Amen since its first inception (by direct inspiration, one is tempted to say) to the present day as it has been shaped, coloured and elaborated according to the temperaments of the different men who have come at one time or another within its sphere of influence. Even where it is not at first sight recognisable in the letter, the spirit of the 'Dresden' Amen can never be mistaken. Is it going too far, for example, to suggest that Sir Edward Elgar had in mind, consciously or sub-consciously, the same immortal strain when in 'The Dream of Gerontius' he made the angelic harps to be plucked to this haunting refrain?—

Perhaps he was merely asserting an apostolical succession of a very suggestive kind. But it is certain that aspiring choristers who have recourse to the 'Dresden' Amen in moments of great exaltation during their high festivals will find themselves among a vast company of the elect of music. Like them, they will bridge the ages by a single Amen.

ORGANS BUILT FOR THE ROYAL PALACE OF WHITEHALL.

BY ANDREW FREEMAN.

(Concluded from September No., p. 587.)

Two other organs remain to be mentioned, since they are connected by tradition with the Palace—one, it will be seen, quite erroneously.

Rimbault says<sup>81</sup> that the Harris organ in the church of St. Michael's, Paternoster Royal, E.C., came from St. Anne's, Soho, to which church it was presented by William III. So far this is correct, but Rimbault is wrong in adding that 'it was formerly in one of the royal apartments at Whitehall.' It was never at Whitehall, but at the Queen's Chapel, St. James's Palace (now generally known as Marlborough House Chapel), and the date of its removal was not 1691, but 1699.<sup>82</sup> The instrument was destroyed in 1893.

The other organ, that at the church of St. Nicholas, Stanford-on-Avon, Northamptonshire, deserves somewhat fuller treatment, in spite of the fact that, so far as is at present known, there is no documentary evidence to connect it with Whitehall. The indirect evidence is, however, quite strong, and the traditions are not only persistent but date back quite a hundred years.

Before speculating upon its history it will be as well to describe the organ as I found it in August, 1908, and in August, 1910. The church is an interesting 14th century building which has fortunately escaped the perils of 'Restoration.' Amongst its treasures are some old oak fittings in the chancel, some ancient and remarkable stained glass, and the unique and beautiful organ-case. The last-named stands in a loft at the west end of the church, in front of the tower arch. The loft, which rests upon two simple stone columns, and the organ-case harmonize so well that they seem to dominate the interior with calm and stately dignity. The effect must have been really splendid when the organ appeared in the full glory of its original colouring—some of which has lasted to the present time.

The case is of deal and is a double one, but the portion in front of the gallery is merely a screen to the player.

The main case consists of three towers of pipes and two intermediate flats. The central tower (three sides of an octagon) contains nine pipes, the other two (semi-circular) five pipes each, while the intermediate flats used to hold thirteen pipes each, but a few are now missing. Many of these pipes are embossed with various patterns, and most of them are embellished with gilt, whilst the few plain ones amongst them have gilded mouths. Each of the side towers is supported by a cherub, and the centre tower by two. Above the central tower is a cushion, painted red, with gilded ribbons hanging down on either side. On this cushion rests a mitre, coloured blue and picked out with gold, whilst above this is a gilt crown, the inner side of which is red. The side towers are each surmounted by a quaint little angel blowing a trumpet. The carving of the friezes and pipe-shades is extremely good, and the panelling at the sides is bold and effective.

The lower case consists of three compartments of wooden dummy pipes—a central flat of eleven pipes, and two flat towers containing three—seventeen in all. Nearly all of these pipes are decorated in keeping with the embossed pipes in the main case, while the pipe-shades are covered with a cream-coloured stencilled pattern which shows up well, and makes up for the absence of carving. It is quite obvious that this smaller case was not part of the original scheme, and that when it was added it was designed to harmonize exactly with the style of the loft. For all this it blends excellently with the main case, the two cases with the gallery combining to form a most admirable composition.

The smaller case does not appear to have contained any speaking pipes since it has been at Stanford. On this point more anon.

The mouths of the pipes in the three towers of the main case are rounded and somewhat deeply recessed. All the rest of the pipes (including the dummies) have leaf-shaped mouths.

The interior of the organ is a grievous wreck. The keyboard, with its black naturals and white sharps, is dismantled. Some of the stop-knobs are broken off and the front boards of the wind-chest are lacking, leaving the pallets exposed to view. (Pallet-springs and leather are in surprisingly good condition.) Of the interior pipes only one now remains in its place—a mournful-looking 'Bass Trumpet,' mired over so as not to project above the top of the case. In 1908 I found a large number of pipes scattered over the gallery floor, most of the metal ones having been trodden flat, but by 1910 these had been gathered together into heaps, some of the smaller 'oddments' finding refuge in boxes.

The method of blowing the organ is (or rather was) peculiar. The bellows lever, placed vertically, is hinged at its lower extremity near the floor, the handle being at the upper end. Just below the place where it is grasped by the hand, this lever is connected with another one which is attached to the feeders, and works horizontally. The action of the hand in blowing is thus to and fro instead of up and down.

There is but one manual, whose compass is from one note below CC (that is, in all probability, from GG) to E, fifty-four notes. There are no pedals. The names of the stops—some of them curiously spelt—are written on paper labels pasted on the stop jambs. The list follows:

Left.	Right.
OP: DIAPASON <sup>83</sup>	FIFTEENTH
O	B <sup>3</sup> TERTCE
B TRUMPET	ST DIAPASON
TR TRUMPET	TWELFTH
CORNET	PRINCIPE <sup>84</sup>

Over the keyboards is to be seen the following pencilled inscription—"Jeremiah Daniel painting the church June 10th 1766." This seems to point to the organ having been out of use even at that date, for surely had there been an organist this 'unholy scribble' would have been obliterated, even supposing that said Jeremiah would have dared to perpetrate it. It is certainly a matter to be devoutly thankful for that neither the gentleman with the doubly prophetic name nor any one else was appointed to furbish up the case.

Rimbault<sup>85</sup> has this to say as to its history:—"Nichols, in his 'History of Leicestershire,' tells us that Stamford (sic) Church is decorated with a handsome organ, that formerly belonged to the banqueting room, Whitehall, which by order of Cromwell was taken down and sold. It was intended, he says, to be placed in the Chapel of Magdalen College, Oxford, but, being too small, was purchased by the Cave family. Dr. Bloxam<sup>86</sup> suggests that it was offered in exchange for the Magdalen organ, which seems more than probable."

To this Mr. Sandon, the late Vicar of Stanford, in a pamphlet, adds 'that it was built to the order of Charles I., and that the date of its removal to Stanford was 1649 or 1650.' (See the second volume of Mr. A. G. Hill's splendid work on 'Organ Cases.')

According to another tradition it was given to Sir Thomas Cave, of Stanford, by Charles II., but neither of these traditions is backed up by documentary evidence. (Nichols's 'History' dates from c. 1815.)

So much for legend. Let us turn once more to the organ itself.

Attention is first drawn to the crown and mitre which surmount the central tower. There are many organs scattered up and down the country where these symbols of temporal and spiritual power are to be found side by side, but I have never yet seen or heard of one where the supremacy of the crown is so openly proclaimed—one might almost say flaunted—as here. Surely it had a political significance, and we are justified in inferring (1) that the organ undoubtedly belonged to an English monarch, and (2) that it dates from a period when the royal claim to supremacy over the church was of paramount importance.

A comparison with other pre-Restoration organs gives very little help towards fixing this date, because only some eight or ten of these are now in existence: moreover, they differ widely in design and detail, and in only about three of them is their date established beyond controversy. All that can be said on this point, then, is that Mr. Hill's statement that 'the whole dates from about the year 1625' can be accepted with the reservations that the main case is older than the smaller case, and that there is nothing in its design or details which is inconsistent with a date as early as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, while the presence of crown and mitre give at least some measure of probability to the theory that it was built for Whitehall in the days of the Virgin Queen.

Moreover this same device points with some degree of certainty to the Chapel rather than the Banqueting Room as the building in which it was first placed, though it may have been removed to the latter place to make room for a new instrument in the Chapel. If it had been in the Banqueting Room in the time of Charles I. it would have been taken down in the early years of the Commonwealth, for we may be quite sure that no organ would have been allowed to remain in that building which, we know, was used for the preaching services of the Parliament. On the other hand, if it had remained in the Chapel till the death of the King it would be the organ which was 'embezzled' during the Commonwealth, and restored to the Chapel through the instrumentality of John Playford at the beginning of the reign of Charles II. In this event it could not have been set up at Stanford until the year 1662 or 1663, when its place at Whitehall was filled, as we have seen, by a new organ built by Father Smith.

One weak place in the argument must be pointed out. It will be remembered that the Whitehall Chapel organ contained a 'Chaire' organ in 1636, which the Stanford organ lacks, but when we recall the vicissitudes through which the organ passed—that it was removed from its loft and taken, in all probability, to a private house, where the Choir organ and its case might have been discarded<sup>85</sup> (how many private houses of the period could have found room for the complete double organ case?) or, what is more likely, that the Choir case was kept merely as a screen for the player—it will probably be admitted that the 'double organ' difficulty is not an insuperable one, nor sufficient to overthrow the theory.

Moreover, as has been already pointed out when dealing with the Chapel instrument, the Choir organ seems to have been added just previous to the year 1636. It would, therefore, be the more easily disconnected and discarded when it passed into private hands, the remainder still being a complete one-manual instrument; whilst at the Restoration, when an instrument was urgently needed, and a new one was out of the question at so short a notice, the fact that it then contained only a single manual would not stand in the way of its being set up in the Chapel and used till a more efficient instrument could be constructed to take its place.

There remains one thing more to be said before leaving this question of the Choir organ. It will be remembered that a new loft was ordered for the Chapel in 1663. What is more likely than that the old one went to Stanford with the organ? If this were so it explains not only why the Choir case and gallery match each other so exactly while they harmonize so well with the main case, but also why the whole composition which forms such a splendid feature of the interior at Stanford is quite unlike any of the other internal fittings of the church. In addition, it fixes the date of the Choir case, or screen, at just previous to 1636.

On the whole I believe that the balance of evidence is strongly in favour of the view that the Stanford organ and gallery came from Whitehall Chapel in the year 1663, or very shortly after.

As to why the organ should have gone to Stanford, it should be said that the friendship between Charles II. and Sir Thomas Cave is not the only link between Stanford and Whitehall. Archbishop Laud was for a time Vicar of the parish, and if this fact had been recalled by the King and Sir Thomas, it must have struck both of them that no more fitting memorial could have been devised than the erection in his old Church of this organ, to whose tones he had so often listened at Whitehall. One can picture, in imagination, the shade of the Primate pacing the flags of his deserted church, his head bowed as if in thought, pausing now and again to gaze up at the familiar features of the organ which he had known so well when the voices of both were uplifted to the praise and glory of God in the Chapel of the King's Palace at Whitehall.

Church and Organ Music.

A NEW BOOK ON THE ORGAN.*

BY W. G. ALCOCK.

Most of us remember with gratitude Rinck's 'Organ School,' which has been the beginning of many a successful organist's career. Best's 'Art of Organ Playing,' Archer's 'Organ School,' Stainer's admirable Primer, and the lately published work by Professor Buck, all have as their common object the advancement of the fascinating art. Turning to the practical side of organ building we find the monumental work by Hopkins and Rimbault, and the splendid volumes published in America by Audsley; after which may be mentioned such works as that lately issued by Messrs. Lewis, Robertson's 'Practical treatise on organ building,' and that valuable little book 'A Dictionary of organ stops,' by J. I. Wedgwood. It would seem as though the subject must be practically exhausted by such a list. But the result of much fine teaching has led to a demand for a clearer enunciation of the rules by which alone mastery of the instrument may be secured. The secret of true organ touch with all its subtleties was known to comparatively few, but the little heaven has been working and quietly spreading, and we are now, with modern refinements in tone and mechanism, ready for an even greater advance than has already been secured.

* 'Organ Playing: its Technique and Expression,' by A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. Augener, Ltd., London.

In more than one of the volumes first mentioned, much excellent advice may be found in the text, particularly (if we may distinguish) in Dr. Buck's work. But Dr. Hull has succeeded in presenting the subject in a new light, though he naturally treats of many points which must be common property. After an Introductory chapter he gives a short but sufficient description of the instrument, with the specifications of a few notable examples, including that in St. Thomas's Church, Leipsic. The next chapter deals with the important matter of Touch, both in manual and pedal work. It is difficult to follow Dr. Hull in his claim that so much variety of touch is feasible on the organ. On a tracker organ, where one almost 'feels the pipes,' greater difference of touch is no doubt possible, but the modern organ is the subject of which Dr. Hull is writing, and pneumatic or electro-pneumatic action is assumed. Surely the act by the finger of depressing a key does nothing more than admit wind to the pneumatic contrivances which eventually pull down the pallet? If this be granted, it must be admitted that the pallet is either allowing wind to enter the pipe above, or preventing it. There is no middle course, as on the pianoforte, and the result is, I think, that there are but two distinct touches, viz., legato, and detached or staccato. Of the last there may be some degrees, though a sharp staccato on the organ is not effective. Dr. Hull is undoubtedly right in making a great point of the release of the key, for there lies the secret of a good organ touch. No doubt to the player there may be several varieties, but the result to the listener is either legato or detached, or at most a blending of the two in matters of phrasing. Indeed, Dr. Hull says 'one of the drawbacks of the electric action seems to be that it is so perfectly prompt that it does not give any variety at all in attack.' Surely this is destructive to the two, or even three, grades of attack which are claimed as being possible! He also speaks of a certain organ on which any unaccustomed player is almost certain to obtain a 'squeaky tone-production instead of the usually pellucid treatment in the hands of its own regular player.' This is surely impossible, on the grounds mentioned above, for a pneumatic organ is clearly in the author's mind! In passing, I might add that I have actually seen an organist, while holding a note, move his hand over it as a violinist does in obtaining an effect of tremolo! But there is so much excellent advice in this chapter, that if the question of variety of touch were reduced to its simplest terms, as apparent to the listener, there would be nothing to cavil at.

The chapter on Fingering is comprehensive, and it is rightly maintained that the rules for pianoforte fingering should form the basis for the organ. There are of course many other devices, and interesting and instructive examples are given. All must agree with Dr. Hull that 'it is the prerogative of the players to legislate on the matter of keyboard instruments,' and that if the addition of three or four notes reduce the octave span by an eighth of an inch, and consequently a 5-octave organ by  $\frac{1}{8}$  of an inch, it were better to dispense with the extra notes. A valuable chapter on Pedalling follows, though some of the 'footing' given by the author might be modified. For example, the following is recommended:

To many the use of the right heel on the reiterated G would be exceedingly awkward. The alternatively suggested V is infinitely better.

Again, in the following, alternate toes would be preferable:

In the important matter of Phrasing it is good to find Dr. Hull drastically exposing the extremely inaccurate directions in such passages as the subjects of the fugues in Mendelssohn's second and fourth Sonatas, and in much of Rheinberger's work. Either explanation offered may be correct, and that a general legato may be intended, or that the composer (or compositor) may have inserted indiscriminately the slurs to aid the eye in reading. Undoubtedly the 'musician' (and the title is not invariably synonymous with 'organist'!) will be guided by the construction of the music before him.

But in the example quoted below, does not one phrase-mark destroy the other, even though the footnote be obeyed?

The advice given as to the pedal passage in the Toccata in F is hardly in the 'Bach' manner:

Does the passage need phrasing at all? Surely it is so clear that it speaks for itself, though one might acquiesce as to the phrasing if Dr. Hull would delete the tempo variation.

To the very important subject of Colour, Dr. Hull has devoted much research and space, and the chapter is perhaps the most interesting of all. The various stops are classified according to their quality and power, and excellent suggestions given for their combination. In the face of modern tone-refinement, the matter has become of far greater importance than ever, and with the facilities offered by modern mechanism almost anything is possible. The danger lies in making one's art subservient to and dependent on them both.

Dr. Hull has much to say of so-called 'String tone,' and great care is certainly necessary in the use of Gambas, for they will stand out against almost any other quality, refusing to mix with it, much as in chemistry we can obtain either a mechanical mixture or a chemical compound. His remarks on Diapasons make instructive and sound reading. To his poetic quotations might be added:

'While the majestic organ rolled Conitron from its mouths of gold'

as the best illustration of the glorious tone of the only real organ pipe.

A more detailed account of 'Mixtures' would be welcome, for many organs have been spoiled by them. The examples furnished by old organs, with their small scale and carefully selected composition, gave way in time to a coarse and brutal tone which was out of balance, and we are only just getting to know something of their true effect, which Dr. Hull happily terms a 'shower of stars,' or, as Dr. W. S. Hoyte calls it, a 'stream of silver.' I totally disagree with many eminent persons who hold that Mixtures should be melted down to make Diapasons. Even if they do not (as some suppose) fulfil their mission in strengthening the ground tone, they produce an accidental effect, the loss of which many would regret.

Dr. Hull gives a great deal of admirable advice on application of tone-colour, and generally succeeds in justifying his claims. He rightly warns his readers in their use of Octave Couplers, though he admits that they have a legitimate field. Much interest attaches, too, to the chapter on Ornaments, many examples of which are given, with their interpretation. Criticism on the chapter is confined to the actual type of the ornaments, which seems clumsy and out of proportion to the otherwise excellent type and letterpress. The remaining chapters on Style, and Methods in Study, conclude the book, and are full of excellently sound advice. Dr. Hull will forgive these friendly criticisms when it is admitted that his book is one of the most interesting and instructive which have yet appeared.

It is just the sort of thing we wanted—a book on the subject so fascinating to us all, not perhaps intended for actual organ study, but something to read—may be, in the train—and certainly invaluable for purposes of reference. In a later edition he might do well to speak of the organ as a means of accompaniment, which is at least as important to the church organist as his solo work. A few misprints, too, could then be corrected, e.g., Sigmund Karg-Elert (Preface) should be Sigfrid, and on page 160, paragraph 282, Healey Willans should read Healey Willan, or Healey Willan's Prelude &c.

A series of recital programmes is given which may well be interesting and helpful to many, while the inclusion of the specifications of Bach's organs is of great value. To students and teachers the classification of pieces is most instructive, while the Table of Contents, Glossary, and Index go to make complete this very valuable contribution to modern organ literature.

THE BUILDING OF LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.

Seven years have elapsed since the foundation stone was laid in July, 1904, by King Edward, accompanied by Queen Alexandra. Nearly two years were afterwards taken in building the massive foundations from the solid rock. In the other five years the exquisitely beautiful Lady Chapel, a modern example of 14th century Gothic, was built and consecrated in June, 1910, and the construction of the Choir, Transepts and Chapter House proceeded with at a rapid rate. The Chapter House is a memorial to the first Earl of Lathom, to be erected at a cost of £10,000 by Lancashire Freemasons. The average elevation of the walls of the main fabric has reached 97 feet, and the highest point is 115 feet, the transverse arches of the Choir. The main transverse arch is completed, also the other arches to carry the vaulting of the Choir. The great east window, a memorial to the late Mr. T. H. Ismay, is already built up to the springing of the tracery. This window will probably be the largest east window in the Kingdom, and the subject chosen for its stained glass is the Te Deum. It had originally been planned for the transepts to be crowned by twin towers, rising to a height of 260 feet. This plan has been superseded by a single tower 280 feet high, which exceeds the central tower of York Minster by eighty-two feet. It will be 104 feet square at its base. At present the central tower of York Minster, 65 feet square, is the largest in England. The revision of the original design involves an extra expenditure of £25,000, but will give a central open space 190 feet by 87 feet. As regards the progress made in the building of the Choir, at the present time the six choir aisle windows are finished and waiting for the stained glass, and the triforium has advanced to the roof line, and the organ chambers built on either side of the Choir.

Under the will of the late Mr. James Barrow, a sum of ten thousand pounds is set apart for the provision of a grand organ, the specification for which is now receiving careful consideration. The cost of this noble undertaking now stands at £347,000, and a further sum of £78,000 is still required. It will probably take four or five years more to complete the great building. In the meantime daily services are held in the Lady Chapel, to which hosts of people repair and enjoy the refreshment of a well-ordered service in a building which by its beauty uplifts the soul.

We have often wondered why Northerners are so keen on organ recitals as compared with those of Southern districts. A series of recitals on Fridays is in progress at Manchester Cathedral, and the hour has been arranged to suit business men, the recitals beginning at 1.10 and finishing at 1.50. On Friday, October 13, Dr. W. G. Alcock played to an audience which practically filled the Cathedral, many in fact being contented with standing room. A very remarkable feature was the singing of the Old Hundredth, to the organ accompaniment of Mr. Sydney Nicholson, the Cathedral organist, who knew the capabilities of the large congregation so well, that he left them to sing two verses practically without accompaniment. All the parts were strongly represented, though the Cathedral choir as a body was not present, while the pitch was absolutely maintained. We shall never forget the experience, and came away thinking that if all congregations were so musical, we should have to modify our opinion of so-called 'congregational singing.' Another question which presented itself was 'When did all those earnest, hard-worked men get their lunch?' We feel bound to add a word of praise for the truly splendid organ recently built by Messrs. Hill & Son. We gave, in a former number, a short account of the instrument, but cannot help saying that the work reflects the highest credit upon the builders, and no less upon Mr. Sydney Nicholson, who evidently knows what a real Cathedral organ should be.

A drastic method of compelling attention to an unaccustomed idiom was recently adopted by the organist of Oswestry Parish Church (Mr. Alfred E. Floyd). Karg Elert's 'Harmonies du soir' was placed early in his recital programme, but to impress his listeners with the beauty of the work, which must have been unknown to many, it was repeated immediately after the offertory hymn! We hope the collection was liberal. As an alternative, we suggest that on a future occasion the offertory hymn be repeated, and with its 'silver' accompaniment.

The Seventh Choral Festival of the combined choirs of Chichester, Salisbury and Winchester Cathedrals was held in Chichester Cathedral on September 27, a very large congregation attending. The service, which began at 3 o'clock, was representative of many styles of church music. The Canticles were sung to the setting by Sir George Elvey in A. The anthems were 'And there was a river' (Ouseley), 'Jesu, the very thought' (Vittoria), 'Let my prayer come up' (Purcell, from Sir F. Bridge's arrangement), 'Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles' (Kendrick Pyne, of Bath), and 'Save, Lord, and hear us' (W. Hayes). During the assembling of the congregation Merkel's Sonata in E minor was played by Mr. R. Swanborough, assistant-organist of Chichester Cathedral, and Borowski's Andante in F minor by Dr. W. Prendergast, organist of Winchester Cathedral. At the conclusion of the service Mr. W. K. Stanton, of Merton College, Oxford, played Rheinberger's Sonata No. 7, in F minor. Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist of Chichester Cathedral, accompanied the first portion of the service and conducted the anthems, the accompaniments of the latter being shared by Mr. Swanborough and Mr. Stanton. It should be added that during the offertory Mr. L. E. Minchin, of Chichester, played the Andante espressivo from Sir Edward Elgar's Organ sonata.

The fifty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, was celebrated on September 29. The proceedings actually commenced with choral evensong on the previous day, when Elvey's continuation of Croft in A, and the anthem 'At that time shall Michael stand up,' by the Rev. Dr. Mee, Precentor of Chichester, and Honorary Fellow of St. Michael's, were sung.

On Michaelmas Day full choral matins took place at 11.30, when the music included Smart's Te Deum and Jubilate in F, the anthems 'Great is the Lord' and 'Jerusalem on high,' both by Sir Frederick Ouseley. Mr. Norman Woods, organist of the College, accompanied throughout with conspicuous skill and judgment. Dinner in the College hall followed the service, and was preceded and concluded by a Latin grace in five-part harmony by Sir Frederick Ouseley. Evensong was sung at five o'clock, the setting of the Canticles being Gibbons in F, and the anthem Sir Hubert Parry's 'I was glad,' written for the Coronation Service of King Edward, and repeated at that of King George. At the conclusion of the service Dr. Sinclair, of Hereford, who is also an Hon. Fellow of St. Michael's, gave an organ recital.

Music thoroughly representative of all that is best, was used at the services throughout the octave, the spirit of the Festival being well maintained. The proceedings reflect the highest credit upon all concerned, particularly the Rev. John Hampton, who is responsible for the duties of Warden, Precentor and Choirmaster, and it is most gratifying to find the traditions laid down by the revered founder (Sir Frederick Ouseley) so well respected.

The new organ (built by Messrs. Liddiatt & Sons, of Leonard Stanley) in Amberley Church was dedicated on Friday, September 29. The instrument has been erected to the memory of Mrs. Caroline Barbara Blackwell, and consists of three manuals and pedals, governed by pneumatic action. The carved oak case was designed by Mr. S. Gambier Parry, of Westminster. At the conclusion of the service the organist (Mr. G. E. Kiddle) gave a recital, and included in his programme were pieces by Salomé, Guilmant, Silas, &c.

In connection with their Harvest Festival services, September 24, the choir of the Nottingham Central Mission, Halifax Place, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' under the direction of Mr. E. M. Barber. Miss E. Warner, Miss E. Lester, and Mr. J. Franklin Pearson were the soloists. Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson accompanied at the organ.

An inaugural recital on the new Beecher Memorial Hope-Jones Organ, at Christ Church, Vancouver, was given by Mr. Ferdinand Dunkley, on October 3.

The organ in the Parish Church, Burnley, originally built by Messrs. Hill, has been entirely rebuilt with considerable additions by Messrs. Norman & Beard. The re-opening and re-dedicating services were held on October 5 and October 8, when recitals were given after evensong by Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank, the organist and choirmaster, who drew up the scheme of reconstruction. The new instrument gives every satisfaction, and is worthy of the church and the excellent services held therein.

Dr. Brewer's 'A song of Eden' was performed for the first time in Bristol, on October 8, on the occasion of a Harvest Thanksgiving Service at St. Thomas's Church (City). Orchestral accompaniment was employed, and a very impressive result was secured. Mr. Lee Williams's eight-part setting of the Lord's Prayer, and a selection from 'The Creation,' also formed part of the service. Mr. W. A. Lamb, Mr. Lee Williams, and Dr. Brewer conducted.

An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given at the Wesleyan Church, Wallington, on October 9, by a choir of sixty voices with full orchestral accompaniment, under the conductorship of Mr. H. A. Charman.

The choir at Church End (Finchley) Congregational Church sang Maunder's 'Song of Thanksgiving' on October 10, Mr. Frederick Meen presiding at the organ. The soloists were Mrs. Hollis, Mrs. Williams, Mr. Albert Maiden and Mr. E. Loder.

The Leytonstone Church Choir Association, in which four choirs are united, assisted at evensong at the Church of

S. Columba, Leytonstone, on St. Luke's Day, when the choir of about 120 voices sang Gadsby's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C, the 'Hallelujah' from 'Mount of Olives,' and Smart's setting in F of the Te Deum. The tone-quality of the boys was noticeably good, and there was some effective piano singing.

At a Harvest Festival held on October 19, at St. Luke's, Hillmorton Road, Holloway, 'The Creation,' Part I., and 'Blest pair of Sirens,' were performed, under the direction of Mr. B. J. Dale.

Reviews.

Forty years of song. By Emma Albani.

[Mills & Boon, Ltd.]

The termination of Madame Albani's long and honourable career has been fittingly marked by the occurrence of a great benefit concert at the Albert Hall and by the issue of this book. 'Forty years of song' is the record of continuous brilliant success in almost every country of the world where music obtains a hearing. It teaches some useful lessons. The aspirant to vocal fame should note that although the great gifts of Miss Emma Lajeunesse, as Madame Albani was christened, were recognised and appreciated from her early youth, she nevertheless did not shrink from a long and assiduous course of study. The second lesson which emerges frequently from Madame Albani's account of her travels and acquaintances, is that of charity and kindness towards artistic rivals. It cannot be said that Madame Albani extracts from her career much that is of historical or general interest; her reminiscences have a tendency to descend towards 'small talk.' But they occasionally introduce a good story and an instructive little side-light on affairs. She dwells with pardonable fondness upon her extensive acquaintance with royalty, extending from Queen Victoria to the King of the Sandwich Islands. The great honours and the great triumphs of her life are, however, described with exemplary modest directness and often ingenuousness of diction. As a book-compiler Madame Albani is unfortunate in having no misfortunes or vicissitudes to describe as a contrast to her successes. She stepped immediately into her place in the firmament and never came behind a cloud. The volume is illustrated by portraits of the author and her distinguished acquaintances, and some facsimile autographs.

O hearken Thou. Anthem composed by Edward Elgar.

The Te Deum and Jubilate. Set to music for men's voices in the key of E major. By Charles Macpherson.

Communion Service for Men's Voices. Set to music in the key of F. By R. W. Robson.

Hail! Festal Day (Salve! Festa Dies!). Composed by the Rev. James Baden Powell.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Sir Edward Elgar's Offertorium was a very important feature at the Coronation Service in June last and, by the addition of a second verse, the work is most suitable as an anthem for general use. Any difficulties in the vocal parts soon disappear, while the accompaniment may be made exceedingly effective by a cultured organist upon an instrument of ordinary resources.

Mr. Macpherson's music is always original, and distinguished by strong rhythmic device, while his unerring instinct in the matters of harmonic progression and treatment of his organ part invest whatever he does with unusual interest. He rightly employs three voices in this setting, thereby gaining a more accurate balance than could be obtained by dividing the tenors. Music for men's voices, when intended for church or cathedral settings, is always difficult to write; but Mr. Macpherson has most successfully striven for variety, and we doubt not that, given a competent choir and organist, his service will prove most effective.

Mr. Robson's service should be useful for its straightforward character and interesting organ part, and also for the reason that few settings of the service have yet been written. We prefer three to four voices, in view of the fact that in most cathedrals the number of voices is limited, necessitating the division of the tenors of both sides of the choir. Larger compass for each of the three parts is also secured, ensuring greater interest for the singers, which is no small matter.

The old English Processional Proses for the Feasts of Easter, Ascension, Whitsun, and Dedication, also for 'Corpus Christi,' and a new Prose for Christmas, with 'Lift High the Cross' (to melodies of the Dedication 'Salve'), form the contents of Mr. Baden Powell's volume. His music to 'Hail, Festal Day' has been in constant use for very many years, and the additions now published will no doubt become as widely popular. In view of the approaching Festival of Christmas, the processional music to the fine words written by the Rev. Arthur J. Morris will be very welcome.

Come, winds of God. Unaccompanied hymn. Composed by M. L. Wostenholme.

[E. Donajowski.]

The words of this hymn are by the Rev. Henry Burton, and their undoubted beauty has inspired the composer in his setting of them to an unusual degree. The part-writing is excellent, and we only regret the occasional high note in the alto part, which might give trouble to falsetto voices. With this difficulty overcome, the hymn (or anthem, as we should prefer to call it), should command the attention of many choirs.

Theorie der pneumatischen Orgel-Traktur und die Stellung des Spieltisches (Theory of the pneumatic Organ action and the position of the Console). By J. Biehle.

[Breitkopf & Härtel.]

It is not often that church acoustics are made the subject of scientific research. We all know what deplorable results in the building of churches and the construction of organs are caused by the want of a thorough mastery of this all-important but also much neglected subject. All the more credit is due to the author of the above pamphlet for having made church acoustics the subject of a life-long study, to which he has devoted much time, labour and industry, the results of which he has made known in several German publications. His name, moreover, is not quite unknown in England, since at the recent International Congress of Musicians in London, he delivered an address on the Theory of Church Architecture, which was received with general approval.

In the above quoted pamphlet of some forty pages he deals with the question from the standpoint of the organ builder and organ player. He maintains that the introduction of pneumatic action in the construction of modern organs has a perfectly new bearing on tone-production and tone transmission greatly differing from the old system. We fully agree with the author, and have no doubt that the results of his scientific research will be of the utmost value to all concerned. We only regret that the German pamphlet is not published in English as well, and so ensure it a wider circulation.

The pianoforte works reviewed in our last issue, p. 656, are published by Messrs. Elkin.

CHIME TUNES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I was most interested in Mr. Kidson's identification of the two chime tunes of Wellingborough, but I am somewhat perplexed at his statement that the air of 'How imperfect is expression' is 'French.' In a copy of the song published by E. Rhauns, of Dublin, circa 1778, C. Dibdin is given as the composer. In another copy now lying before me, published by James Aird in 1780 (or earlier), the imprint states 'composed by C. Dibdin.' Mrs. Abingdon sang it at Drury Lane on December 13, 1771.

Again, as to the tune known by a number of titles, I find it in an Irish tune-book of circa 1780, and I also have a note that it was introduced into the 'Haunted Tower' by Storaice in 1789. It is printed as 'Haunted Tower' by Wilson, in 1816.

Yours faithfully,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

Enniscorthy, October 11, 1911.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—Please allow me to express my thanks to Mr. Kidson for his most interesting reply to my inquiries. The dates he assigns to the tunes have greatly interested me. On looking through information obtained from the Churchwardens' Accounts I am inclined to think that the tunes were put on the chime barrel in 1714, when Harvey Sparke and Samuel Knight—churchwardens—expended the sum of £16 6s. 1½d. in 'repairing the chimies to go at the hours of 3, 6, 9 and 12, and each time to go eight times about the cylinder.' The work was probably done by Aires of Kettering as, three years later, 1717—he was paid 'for repairing the chimies £12.' After this no payments other than small amounts for the repair of the chimies are recorded until 1868, when the bells were re-hung and the old chimies put in order by Harris. The cost of a new chime barrel or the alteration of tunes on an existing barrel would be something considerable, and it is extremely unlikely that such an amount would be omitted in the Churchwardens' Accounts. This evidence seems to show that the tunes are considerably older than the dates suggested by Mr. Kidson, for if they were put on the chime barrel in 1714 they must have been in existence and popular some time before that date.

Faithfully yours,

WILLIAM WOODING STARMER.

Warwick Park, Tunbridge Wells.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—It may be worth noting that the tune given in the Musical Times for October as a Chime Tune, under the name 'Henrietta,' was used by Storaice in the Finale of 'The Haunted Tower' (November, 1789). It is there described as 'From "Vive les Fillettes,"' and is set to words beginning

'The banish'd Ills of heretofore

At happy distance viewing.'

Yours faithfully,

G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT.

SCIENCE AND SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—During last year there was considerable correspondence in various journals as to the correctness of the revolutionary theories contained in my book, 'Science and singing,' concerning the art of voice-production. The critic of the Musical Times was not the only person who condemned the work—neither, indeed, would he have been alone had he given it the utmost praise.

In the course of my studies I have lately come across a book published in the same year as my own, entitled 'A system of operative surgery,'* in which the following passage occurs:

'The condition of the patient after Thyrotomy. The voice results are often surprisingly good, even when free excision of soft parts including one or both of the vocal cords has been required. In from forty to sixty per cent. of cases that are cured, the voice is practically normal, though rough and reduced in volume and range.'

Surely we have here an extraordinary although unconscious endorsement of the system of sinus tone-production. If the eyes of a man be taken out can he see? If his ears be removed can he hear? Yet we have it on the highest authority that when the vocal cords—which are supposed to produce sound—are taken away, the patient can still sing and speak; the voice remains 'practically normal.' With respect to those who suffer a material loss of voice, there is but little doubt that a cure could be effected by training on 'Science and singing' principles. It would be difficult to conceive any more severe test of my work than the operation of Thyrotomy. Even the vocal limitations which follow, are in entire accordance with my much thrashed and much praised book.

Yours very truly,

ERNEST GEO. WHITE.

DATE OF THOMAS BRITTIN'S BIRTH.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I believe at last I have discovered the month and year of Thomas Brittin's birth (friend of Handel).

By reference to the Musical Times, August, 1906, p. 529, you will see that I am interested in this subject. I got permission then to search the Higham Ferrers Church Registers, but failed to find the name. By permission of our Rector, I have been searching for other names in Rushden Registers, and this morning I came across the following in our oldest Register:

Anno Dom. 1643. Anno Regni Charoli

Decimo Nona[?]

THOMAS, the son of JOHN BRITTIN was baptized in the yere above written.

I believe this is the Thomas, especially as Coles, who wrote a short 'History of Higham and Rushden,' failed to find Brittin's name in the Higham Registers. Rushden joins Higham Ferrers.

The writing on the parchment is very faded, and I failed to make out day of month, but the rest was clear enough to read,

I shall be glad to know your opinion.

At another search in the Registers I found the following:

Anno Dom. 1643. Anno Regni Charoli. Decimo
Nona.Item the xiiijth day of Aprill. John Brittine and Cozam [?] Ellyat weare marryed in Anno p dict.

This marriage was in the same year as Thomas's birth, only after (in 'April'), and the birth in January; so this John would not be Thomas's father.

I found the following amongst the list of Burials: Anno Dom: 1743. Thomas Brittain June 7th 22d, just a hundred years after Thomas's birth; so not the same Thomas, I think.

In 1643 Frederick Schloer was Rector of Rushden, Northants. I looked into the lists of marriages and burials to see if I could find Thomas's name, but failed; only the 1743.

Notice the three ways of spelling: Brittin, Brittine, and Brittain.

If it proves nothing else, it shows that people of the name of Brittin were living in Rushden for a hundred years.

In 1643 Rushden was but a small village adjoining Higham, the latter place being far more important then, with a busy market, &c. Rushden has now 14,000 inhabitants; in 1643 perhaps 500 people.

Yours faithfully,

JOSEPH ENOS SMITH.

IS AN ORGANIST TOO OLD AT FORTY?

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I am very pleased to find that in the October Musical Times, p. 655, appears such an excellent article upon the above topic. It is very evident you have taken great interest in the correspondence which has been going on in the Musical News since July 15, and I am glad to find that you think an organist is not too old at forty, and that you hope his claims will be more equally considered with those of the younger men than they are at present by the gentlemen who have the power of election to office.

I am, Dear Sir,

Yours very respectfully,

W. M. WAIT.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

M. CHARLES MALHERBE, who passed away on October 6 at Cormeilles (Eure) after a long illness. He was born on April 21, 1853: his musical education was the work of M. Wormser and M. Massenet. Though he composed a good deal he was more widely known as a writer on musical aesthetics and history. In 1896 he became connected with the library of the Grand Opéra, and succeeded M. Nutter as head of this department. He was president of the French section of the International Musical Society, and with Herr Felix von Weingartner edited the complete works of Hector Berlioz. He was said to possess the finest private collection of musical autographs in the world.

Mr. WALTER J. KIDNER, of Bristol, on October 20. He was born at Weston-super-Mare in July, 1851. After a short business career, which terminated in 1875, he became a professional musician, and on the death of his friend Alfred Stone, in 1878, became secretary and manager of the Bristol Musical Festival. This post he held with conspicuous success for over thirty years. During this period he was actively engaged as the teacher of singing-classes and choirs, and in particular as conductor of the Bristol Gleemen, a Society which he founded in 1886. An account of his career was given, with a portrait, in the Musical Times for February, 1908.

Mr. JAMES LEWIS, after a prolonged illness, at his residence at Bournemouth, on September 17. Mr. Lewis, who was seventy-six years of age, was probably the most distinguished amateur musician in Bournemouth. For a considerable period he wrote the analytical notes for the Symphony Concerts' programmes, and he also supplied the musical criticisms for the now defunct Bournemouth Observer.

Mr. THOMAS OLDROYD, on October 17, for over thirty years the principal tenor at Rochester Cathedral. He was a member of the Coronation choirs of King Edward VII. and King George V.

THE COMING SEASON.

The following list is supplementary to that given in our last issue:

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

Royal Albert Hall Sunday Concerts.—The New Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Lanlon Ronald, has been engaged to give concerts on Sunday afternoons from October 1 to April 28, with the exceptions of December 24 and April 7.

The London Symphony Orchestra.—This organization opened its season on October 23. The conductors and dates of the thirteen symphony concerts of the season are as follows:—Sir Edward Elgar: October 23, November 6, November 20, December 4, January 29, February 12. M. Wassili Safonoff: January 15. Herr Mengelberg: February 26. Herr Fritz Steinbach: March 18. Herr Arthur Nikisch: May 20, June 3, June 10. M. Gustave Doret: June 17.

CHORAL CONCERTS.

Crystal Palace Orchestra Society and Crystal Palace Choir (conductor, Mr. W. W. Hedgcock)—Merrie England; A tale of Old Japan (Coleridge-Taylor); King Alfred the Great (Hurlstone).

Edmonton (All Saints') Choral Society (conductor, Mr. B. J. Hales)—The Banner of St. George; The wreck of the Hesperus (MacCunn); Songs of the Fleet (Stanford); Elijah, or The Golden Legend.

Finchley Musical Society (conductor, Mr. H. J. Baggs)—Elijah; Caractacus; The Black Knight; Bon-bon Suite.

Fulham and District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. George Wilby)—Merrie England; Hiawatha, Part I.; The Golden Legend.

Ilford Orchestral and Choral Society (conductor, Mr. H. A. Donald)—Messiah; Oratorio selection; The Creation.

Loughton Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Henry Riding)—St. Paul; Bethlehem (Mauder).

Mansfield House, Canning Town, Choral Society (conductor, Mr. E. Coward)—Magna Charta (Dr. Coward); The May Queen.

Richmond Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Charles E. Jolley)—I wrestle and pray, and Sleepers, wake (Bach); The lay of the last minstrel (MacCunn); Psalm xci. (Meyerbeer); Song of Miriam.

St. James's Prize Glee Party, Wood Green (conductor, Mr. J. S. Marshall)—The Rose Maiden (Cowen); John Gilpin (Cowen); Part-songs.

Twickenham Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Arthur Cowen)—St. Paul; Hymn of Praise; The Martyr of Antioch; The Messiah.

University of London Musical Society (conductor, Mr. Richard H. Walthew)—Ave verum (Mozart); Requiem (Mozart); Sacred Dialogue (Becker); Antigone (Mendelssohn); Phauldric Crohoore (Stanford).

West Norwood Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Percy S. Bright)—Bon-bon Suite; Ode on St. Cecilia's Day (Parry).

Woodside Park Musical Society (conductor, Mr. George Hooper)—The Ancient Mariner (Barnett); The Swan and the Skylark (Goring Thomas); The Revenge; Acis and Galatea.

FIRST MUSICAL FESTIVAL OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Musical festivals are familiar features of musical life in this country. But however important they are as artistic events, their main appeal is local. The year 1911, however, has witnessed a festival of another type.

For the first time a series of musical gatherings wherein England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and South Africa combined have provided a musical festival of the British Empire. This has been brought about by concentrated effort and the amalgamation finally of our Overseas choral and orchestral Societies in conjunction with two hundred members of Dr. Henry Coward's Sheffield Choir. The British singers were called into requisition by Dr. Charles Harriss to take part in the culminating effort of a world movement which had gradually been pieced together during a period of ten years, eventually to wing its flight all over the Empire. This far-reaching scheme of 1911 originated in Canada in 1901. Two years later Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted the 'first lap.' The Principal of the Royal Academy of Music was ably supported at that time by the conductors of the Dominion and their choral Societies in a five weeks' series of festivals from Halifax to Victoria, a full account of which appeared in the columns of the Musical Times. Living composers of England gave support to the movement when in 1906 Elgar, Parry, Cowen, Stanford and Mackenzie joined forces with Canada in a Festival performance in London, made memorable by the gracious patronage and presence of His late Majesty King Edward VII. Further evidence of the growing movement is found in the visit of Sir Frederick Bridge to Canada in 1907, and in the invitation sent to Dr. Harriss in Canada to conduct in South Africa at the Municipal Musical Festival under Dr. Barrow Dowling's direction, thus forging still another link in the chain of events. Then the test was made in 1908 of taking to Canada 200 of the Sheffield Choir before daring to venture upon the greater enterprise for 1911. All having gone well, 1909-10 saw Dr. Harris the founder of the movement in Australasia and, once more, in South Africa, where the splendid co-operation and willing assistance of all sections of the musical profession effectually forged a music-chain of Empire, to the Festivals of which His Majesty the King graciously gave his patronage. Sailing from England for Canada, March 17, 1911, the party numbered 217 people, including the Sheffield Choir, principals, and Dr. Coward. The artists assisting were Miss Jennie Taggart, Miss Maud Willby, Lady Norah Noel (soprano), Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Miss Alice Heeley (contralto), Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. Wilfrid Virgo (tenor), Mr. Robert Charlesworth, Mr. Robert Chignell (bass), and Mr. Edward J. Hodgson, solo organist and choir accompanist. On the arrival of the S.S. Victorian at St. John, N.B., they were met by Dr. Harris and his staff of assistants who, together with the travelling physician, Dr. Westroppe Macdougall, and visiting chorists from England, numbered 224 persons in all. From March 25 to May 19 festival concerts were given in the following cities:—(Canada), St. John, Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Peterborough, Toronto, St. Catherine's, Hamilton, Brantford, London, Stratford, Chatham; (United States), Rochester, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Waterloo, St. Paul; (Canada), Winnipeg, Portage-la-Prairie, Brandon, Regina, Moose-Jaw, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, Vancouver, and Victoria. Epoch-making for Canada was the appearance in Toronto of Sir Edward Elgar, who journeyed across the Atlantic expressly to conduct performances of 'Gerontius' in that city, as also at Buffalo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, and St. Paul. Thanks to the liberality of Mr. H. C. Cox, an enthusiastic music-lover and noted financier, Canada now possesses in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra a permanent body of sixty-five excellent instrumentalists, admirably conducted by Mr. Frank Welsman. Their work at these festivals called for warm praise. The concerts here brought forth meritorious compositions by Dr. Broome, Dr. Ham, and Dr. Vogt, each conducting his own work. Sir Edward Elgar's fame and personality as conductor, added to the widespread interest manifest in the master's 'Dream of Gerontius,' made record houses everywhere, while his kindly co-operation set a hall-mark on the scheme itself.

The hospitality of the Canadian people was abundantly shown to the visiting British chorists as they sang their song through the prosperous cities of the Dominion, and doubtless as they wended their way along the picturesque shores of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, through the cultured farm and fruit lands of Ontario, through the seemingly endless bread fields of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, thence through the glories of the Rocky Mountains and swiftly flowing Fraser River leading them into the fertile soil of semi-tropical British Columbia full and rich in all manner of good, the hearts surely of all must have rejoiced at the wonders they had seen in beholding for the first time a portion of their inheritance, which already has become one of the great countries of the world.

THE WAGNER FESTIVAL AT MUNICH.

JULY 31—SEPTEMBER 9, 1911.

This year's 'Festspiele' in Munich consisted of three productions of the entire 'Ring of the Nibelungen,' together with as many performances of 'Tristan and Isolde' and the 'Meistersinger.' A word should first be said concerning the Prinz-Regenten Theatre, which is built on a model of the Bayreuth Opera House. The orchestra, half of which is under the stage itself, is roofed in, and has only an opening facing the stage; this has the double advantage of throwing the full sound of the orchestra to where the singers themselves are standing, and of subduing the sound of over a hundred instruments to the softness necessary for musical accompaniment. The scenery, little as some may value it, deserves consideration, for Wagner's stage instructions are exacting in the extreme. The stage-managers this year tried almost for the first time the somewhat new 'round-horizon' scenery, as it is called. It dispenses with the 'wings' of former times, and adds much to the vividness of landscape and sky effects.

With such a number and variety of first-class singers, it is impossible to single out one or two as the 'star' performers. In Munich there are no 'stars' for the very reason that they are all—or very nearly all—'stars.' The incongruity of hearing for instance an excellent Isolde, singing with an execrable Tristan—a feature which is, unfortunately, some times found on the English stage—is altogether unknown at the Prinz-Regenten Theatre. They do not shrink from giving the very best of singers a minor 'rôle' if in their opinion he is best suited for that particular part. Nor is any rôle confined to one singer alone. In the first production of 'Tristan,' we found the Hamburg tenor, Urlus, singing excellently in the title-part, in which he showed great feeling and expression. In the two subsequent productions, however, of the same opera the Dresden singer, von Bary, failed to come up to expectations. His voice is insufficient both in strength and quality. He was, in fact, the one disappointment of this year's Festival.

Amongst other 'guests'—as the singers from other towns are here called—Edyth Walker made a very good impression as Isolde, and a moderately good one as Brünnhilde.

Frau Weidt, from Vienna, was a more pleasing Isolde, possessing a subtle charm in her acting, and giving the part a more natural character. Cahier, also from Vienna, was Brangäne, and she has almost as much tenderness in her voice as Weidt.

The chief feature in the performances of the 'Meistersinger,' was that, for all the characters except one, only Munich singers were chosen. From the very beginning they showed that they were capable of entering the lists with any company of singers in Germany; and even the little which they lacked so far as individual singing was concerned, they made up for amply in ensemble. Feinhals was the genial and cheery Hans Sachs, and was the outstanding figure of the whole Festival; his acting was simple and unaffected, whilst his voice seemed as it were to flow from his throat. Van Rooy was on one occasion heard in the same part, but with less success.

The productions of the 'Ring' extended over six days, one day elapsing between 'Walküre' and 'Siegfried,' and another between the latter and 'Götterdämmerung.' Feinhals appeared here in the very different character of Wotan and showed his versatility by assuming that noble and finally tragic part with acting that was almost godlike in itself.

Güntherbraun's Loge was excellent, and was acted with considerable humour; whilst Gillman and Bender as Fasolt and Fafner were as gruff as could be desired. Knotte, who sang Siegfried (and also Walther in the 'Meistersinger'), is Munich's best tenor; and he shared these two rôles with Kraus, of Berlin. There was very little to choose between them; Knotte, perhaps, excelling in the sentimental passages. Schumann-Heink appeared at her best this year in what we might call the 'stationary' parts of Erda, in 'Walküre,' and of one of the Norns in 'Götterdämmerung.' The Brünnhilde of Mottl-Fassbender was enthralling. Her voice was almost perfect in its purity and in the feeling expressed in it, and her acting full of spirit, always graceful and dignified. Sieglinde was impersonated by Morena, of Munich, who only brought out the full strength and magnitude of her voice in the second act of 'Walküre.' To add to this long list of singers, Zador of Berlin, as Alberich, sang and acted to perfection; whilst his fellow-Nibelung, Mimi, taken by Kuhn, was almost equally as good. The latter also gave an excellent study of David in the 'Meistersinger.' In this opera, the character of Beckmesser was taken by Geiss, a well-known comedy actor on the Munich stage.

It is impossible as yet to conjecture how amongst the four conductors of this year's Festival is destined to take the place of the late Felix Mottl. Dr. Richard Strauss, the celebrated composer, conducted amongst other works one excellent performance of 'Tristan and Isolde.' Fischer seemed to be a rather less exacting conductor than either Röhr or Lohse. The latter is now enjoying a deserved triumph in the Théâtre de la Monnaie.

In the Prinz-Regenten Theatre, as in Bayreuth, the works of Wagner are given without cuts.

Comparisons are never desirable things. Yet it is usual—and perhaps pardonable—to contrast the performances in the two theatres with one another. In the Prinz-Regenten there is more uniformity; the singers are chosen rather for the chances of their combining well together than for any European or American popularity which they may enjoy. And it is not too bold to assert that in one year more, when Munich will have the right to perform 'Parsifal,' there will be little or nothing to choose between the two greatest homes of Wagnerian music in Germany.

MADAME ALBANI'S FAREWELL.

The wonderful faithfulness of the London public to their favourites, which takes no account of waning glory, was demonstrated at the Albert Hall on October 14, when Madame Albani made her last important public appearance. For over three hours the vast audience remained with practically undiminished numbers in order to hear every one of the songs she was prepared to offer. These included Handel's 'Ombra mai fu,' Chaminade's 'l'Eté,' the Bach-Gounod 'Ave Maria,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' and Tosti's 'Good-bye.' Madame Albani has, perhaps, been unique among great singers in the esteem in which she has been held by her greatest fellow-artists. It was fitting, therefore, that in her last appearance she was supported by such a company of stars as Madame Adelina Patti, Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Plunkett Greene, and Sir Charles Santley, with Miss Adela Verne and Mr. Haydn Wood supplying pianoforte and violin solos, Mr. Henry Bird as accompanist, and the Smallwood-Metcalf Choir and the New Symphony Orchestra (under Mr. Landon Ronald), providing a choral and orchestral background. Tremendous enthusiasm was the key-note throughout, and multitudinous floral offerings were one form of its manifestation. A handsomely-stocked purse was another.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

On September 27, Dr. J. Warriner lectured on 'Revolution and Evolution in teaching music.' A students' concert took place on October 16. Haydn's Trio in C (No. 26), played by Misses Edith K. Bird, Aileen Butler and Winifred Love, formed the principal feature.

The October number of the 'Academic Gazette,' the official organ of the College, contains an account of the last College dinner, particulars of a prize-competition for musical criticism, and over ninety pages devoted to the pass-lists of the various examinations conducted by the College.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

The autumn season of Ballet and Opera opened on October 16 with 'Giselle,' a Ballet by Adolph Adam that has not been given in London recently, and 'Sheherazade,' which became familiar to us during the past summer season. 'Giselle,' in the hands, or rather, the feet of Madame Karsavina and M. Nijinsky as the principals, was shown to be excellently planned with a view to dramatic effect. Tcherépnin's 'Le pavillon d'Armide,' 'Le Carnaval' (on Schumann's music) and 'Sheherazade' were given on October 17. 'Les Sylphides,' on music by Chopin, was given on October 20. In each case M. Pierre Monteux conducted.

For the cycles of 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' the problem of finding a successor to Dr. Richter was met by the choice of Herr Franz Schalk, of Vienna. In 'Rheingold' and 'Die Walküre' his orchestral interpretation was full of emotional energy and excellent in executive finish. In every respect he can be said to have justified his position. The principal members of the cast were as follows:

Wotan ...	Herr van Rooy
Loge ...	Herr Hensel
Alberich ...	Herr Kiess
Mime ...	Herr Bechstein
Fricka ...	Madame Bengell
Erda ...	Miss Marion Beely
Siegmund ...	Herr Hensel
Hunding ...	Herr Fönss
Brünnhilde ...	Madame Rusche-Endorf
Sieglinde ...	Madame Borghild Langaard

SIR EDWARD ELGAR AT TURIN.

The cause of British music on the Continent continues to make headway. One of the latest exemplifications of this progress was the invitation to Sir Edward Elgar from the influential committee managing the orchestral performances given in connection with the great Exhibition being held in Turin, to conduct two of the series of concerts. The president of the managing body is Signor Giuseppe Depanis, and Signor Marcello Capra is the secretary. The concerts took place on October 18 and 20, and were a signal success. Sir Edward describes the orchestra as one of the finest he has ever met: it was not that the tone was especially powerful, but all the playing was so beautiful and artistic. It consisted of a hundred and twenty-five performers, and included in its ranks the most distinguished professors in the city. They gave Sir Edward a most cordial reception, and showed the greatest desire to meet his wishes. Rehearsals were held twice a day—the first from one to three o'clock, and the second from nine to eleven o'clock. The performances were given on October 18 and 20, each time at half-past four in the afternoon. The attendance was large, and the audience very demonstrative. The programme of the two concerts was as follows:

Overture .. ..	'Euryanthe' .. ..	Weber.
Symphony in G minor .. ..	.. ..	Mozart.
Variations .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
March from 'Caractacus' .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
Introduction and Allegro for strings .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
Overture .. ..	'Ruy Blas' .. ..	Mendelssohn.
Larghetto, and Symphony .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
Introduction to 'Gerontius' .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
Violin Concerto .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.

Solo, M. Zacharewitsch.

The ordinary conductor of the band is Signor Toscanini. He and the band were thoroughly familiar with the Introduction and Allegro, they having continually played the work when on a tour. The Italian newspapers, so far as we have seen them, write very warmly about the English music.

THE FESTIVAL OF EMPIRE, CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE WELSH CHOIR.

One of the largest choirs—perhaps the largest—that have ever assembled, even at the Crystal Palace, occupied the Handel Orchestra on September 23. Its 5,800 voices were drawn from the choral societies of Wales, and represented, better than it has ever been represented before in any one body, the choral capacity of the Welsh people. No better choice of conductors could have been made than that of Mr. Harry Evans. He knows what kind of leading a large choir demands, and what personal inspiration Welsh choralists will respond to best, and he drew forth from his forces some of the most striking effects of execution and expression that have ever been heard at the Crystal Palace. The attack was instantaneous, and the tone, always of great beauty, was graded with perfect unity. The choruses sung were Mendelssohn's 'All men, all things' ('Lobgesang'), 'See what love' ('St. Paul'), 'Be not afraid' ('Elijah'), Elgar's 'It comes from the misty ages' ('Banner of St. George'), Handel's 'The King shall rejoice,' and the 'Hallelujah' chorus. Perhaps, however, the most appealing moments, especially to the great majority of the audience, were in the part-song arrangements (by Mr. Evans) of the Welsh folk-songs, 'Ar hyd y nos' and 'Harlech,' and the Welsh national anthem. The solo singers of the concert were Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Ivor Foster, and Mr. Daniel Beddoe. The precision with which the choir was marshalled was a remarkable feat.

THE YORKSHIRE CHOIR.

The singing strength of Yorkshire was represented on October 14 by a choir of two thousand voices brought together under the baton of Mr. T. Tertius Noble. Gorgeous tone-power, great vitality of expression, and striking dynamic effects were naturally the features of the singing. They were displayed in Sullivan's 'Te Deum in D,' Walmisley's 'Not unto us,' Attwood's 'They that go down to the sea,' Wesley's 'Thou wilt keep him,' Handel's 'Let their celestial concerts,' Elgar's 'It comes from the misty ages,' Walford Davies's 'Hymn before action,' and Mr. Noble's 'Triumph song of York,' and smaller numbers. Dr. E. C. Bairstow provided solos and accompaniments at the organ, and Miss Mabel Dalby sang.

MADAME MELBA'S OPERA COMPANY IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Madame Melba's indomitable energy has carried her far beyond the utmost ambition of any prima-donna known to musical history and has caused her, the most famous soprano on the world's operatic stage to-day, to embark on the stormy waters of opera management. In conjunction with the theatrical firm of T. C. Williamson & Co., Ltd., she organized a complete operatic season in what must seem to many of your readers an outlying post of musical civilization, 16,000 miles away from London, and on the triumphant opening night (September 2) in Sydney, she had the satisfaction of announcing to her immense audience that she had realised the highest ambition of her life. People waited at the theatre doors from four o'clock in the morning till the management was forced to stop the rehearsal and admit them, at about two o'clock, to wait in the galleries until eight; and the whole performance of 'Traviata,' from the first enthusiastic welcome of Australia's great prima-donna to the end, was a signal triumph. The operas billed are 'Traviata,' 'Faust,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'La Bohème' (already performed); also 'Lohengrin,' 'Romeo,' 'Otello,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Carmen,' 'Aida,' 'Madama Butterfly,' and 'La Tosca.' It will be time to send details of these performances and the performers in a later notice; suffice it to chronicle now that in spite of the enormous initial difficulties the scheme has been enthusiastically supported and most auspiciously inaugurated. A very fine chorus was prepared for the arrival of the principals by Signor Sacerdote, and a thoroughly capable orchestra has responded well to the skilful direction of Signor Angelini.

London Concerts.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Although other Promenade seasons have been more brilliant and more interesting to the expert, the season which came to an end on October 21 was thoroughly satisfactory in its general artistic results. Monday (Wagner), Friday (Classical), and Saturday (Popular) nights were emphatically its mainstay. The earnestness of Wagnerites and Beethovenites and the wider leisure of Saturday evening brought crowded audiences almost without fail. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday presented a problem that did not solve itself so conveniently. The programmes were excellent enough, but the attendances were as a rule thinner, although the characteristic keenness of attention and ready enthusiasm of Promenade audiences were undiminished. It was on these nights that the novelties were presented. The composers might wistfully regard the many empty seats to which their works were played, but there was abundant satisfaction in the knowledge that the remainder contained the most sympathetic audience that London could provide. Towards the end of the season, however, the attendances on the 'off' nights seemed to improve.

The first novelty that comes under review this month is Mr. Raymond Roze's symphonic poem 'Antony and Cleopatra,' played on September 21. It is thoughtfully constructed, and its various moods are well contrasted and appropriate. The composer has, however, some difficulty in escaping the direct influence of his models, and in some of the most pleasant moments—and there were many—one was conscious of some other source of inspiration than the story of Antony and Cleopatra.

A Fantasia in B minor for pianoforte and orchestra by M. Louis Aubert, was played on September 27 with Mrs. Norman O'Neill as a highly capable soloist. It showed more technical capability and fluency on the part of the composer than inspiration. A pleasant moment was provided on October 3 by the first performance of Mr. Cyril Rotham's tone-poem 'A passer-by,' on Robert Bridges's poem.

M. Georges Enesco, whose 'Roumanian Rhapsody' was well received early in the season, was further represented on October 5 by an Orchestral Suite. When relying on his own imagination for his thematic manner the composer has in the present case been less successful. The first movement, consisting almost entirely of unison for strings, was more of a striving for originality than a happy effect. The same striving was better directed in the later movements, but the music was seldom of a character to make a deep appeal.

A very different type of work, namely, Mr. Eric Coates's 'Miniature Suite' for orchestra, was performed for the first time on October 17. Mr. Coates had previously shown a leaning towards the light and delicate and 'popular,' but he has never indulged it more decisively and effectively than in this work. The ideas and scoring were full of charm, although originality was precluded by the adoption of an idiom that has been exhausted by Johann Strauss and Edward German. As restaurant and theatre entr'acte music, Mr. Coates's Suite is equal to the best.

A cycle of female-voice part-songs by Schumann, arranged as a Suite with orchestral accompaniment by Hans Pfitzner, was performed on October 18 by the Alexandra Quartet, and made a charming effect.

An orchestral Suite by Mahler, based on Bach's second Overture in B minor and third Suite in D minor, was produced on October 20. On the following evening the season terminated amidst a blaze of popular enthusiasm.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The opening Symphony Concert of the season, which took place on October 21, was largely a repetition of the Strauss Concert which formed so interesting a feature of the London Musical Festival of last summer. On that occasion the Orchestra surprised even its keenest admirers by the splendour of its performance of 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' and on October 21 they again lavished their highly-organized skill and emotional power upon the work, which has seldom sounded so inspired and conclusive in its musical expression. Sir Henry Wood's masterly conducting showed at every point a remarkably thorough acquaintance with the score. He also secured much finesse and exceptional lucidity in a performance of the 'Dance of the Seven Veils' from 'Salome.' Madame Aino Ackté again sang the closing scene from the same opera with all her native intensity. She also introduced to London Sibelius's 'Herbstabend,' an 'atmospheric' song of great freedom of design and expression, which nevertheless owed most of the effect it made to Madame Ackté's interpretation. The programme opened with Berlioz's 'Queen Mab' scherzo.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The season of symphony concerts given by this Orchestra started well in every way. The programme on the opening night, October 23, was as follows:

Overture, 'Die Meistersinger' ..	Wagner.
Violin Concerto ..	Elgar.
Herr Fritz Kreisler.
Symphony No. 3, in F (Op. 90) ..	Brakms.
Symphonic Poem, 'Die Ideale' ..	Liszt.

Sir Edward Elgar achieved a brilliant success in his first trial as conductor-in-chief of the series. His interpretation of the Overture was particularly telling in some of its rhythmic effects and climaxes. The performance of the Symphony covered all the wide range of expression demanded by the music, and that of 'Die Ideale' was full of nervous energy. Herr Kreisler gave his familiar interpretation of the Concerto without improving upon it, and both he and the composer were applauded with great enthusiasm by a large audience.

Although the larger events of the present Autumn season—cycles of 'The Ring' at Covent Garden, Mr. Hammerstein's operatic venture, and the enterprising programmes arranged for our leading orchestras—promise to be of exceptional interest and importance, there is a decided diminution of energy in smaller concert-giving. Recitalists as a whole received a rude shock from the financial failure of their efforts during the Coronation summer and are presumably shy of risking a repetition of it. A period of inactivity and consideration in this branch of concert work will be an excellent thing if it leads to a drastic change in the matter of prices.

The opening event of the season, however, was a recital, and one of supreme merit, for it was given by MM. Kreisler and Harold Bauer. The association of these great artists in Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata recalled the occasions when,

2 Going o'er the hills,
Through the milk-white snow,
Heard I ewes bleat
While the wind did blow.
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

3 Shepherds many an one
Sat among the sheep,
No man spake more word
Than they had been asleep,
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

4 Quoth I, "Fellows mine,
Why this guise sit ye?
Making but dull cheer, Shepherds though ye be?"
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

5 "Shepherds should of right
Leap and dance and sing,
Thus to see ye sit,
Is a right strange thing."
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

6 Quoth these fellows then,
"To Bethlem Town we go,
To see a Mighty Lord
Lie in manger low."
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

7 "How name ye this Lord,
Shepherds?" then said I,
"Very God," they said,
"Come from Heaven high."
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

8 Then to Bethlem Town
We went two and two,
And in a sorry place
Heard the oxen low.
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

9 Therein did we see
A sweet and goodly May
And a fair old man,
Upon the straw She lay.
Chorus.—Nowell, &c.

some years ago, MM. Ysaye and Busoni were heard in the same work, and more recently MM. Ysaye and Pugno. It forcibly illustrated the extent to which conceptions of a work can differ while each is perfect in its way. Herr Kreisler as usual gave much of his attention to old violin music, and he performed for the first time an 'Esquisse Andalous' by Morales. The recital took place at Queen's Hall on September 23.

Two of the most interesting chamber music concerts heard in recent years were given at the Queen's Hall on October 3 and 10, by Messrs. Harold Bauer, Kreisler and Casals. The programmes included Beethoven's great Trio in B flat major, Op. 97, and Trios by Schubert (in B flat), Schumann (D minor), Mendelssohn, Brahms and Tchaikovsky. The ensemble of the three artists, each of such eminence in his own sphere, reached at times a very high level, the most remarkable feature being a most attractive blend of delicacy and vitality. The execution in Beethoven was perhaps less distinguished, but it would have been difficult to imagine finer performances than those of the Trios by Schumann, Mendelssohn and Schubert. Their phrasing and eloquent expressiveness in the Tchaikovsky Variations were irresistible.

Madame Carreño exhibited her great attainments at Queen's Hall on October 4, in three Pianoforte sonatas—those of Chopin in B minor, Schumann in G minor, and MacDowell's surmamed the 'Celtic.' Such a programme was a somewhat limited field for a pianist who is at her best where bigness of style is wanted rather than romance, but her interpretations were admirable in their strength, expressiveness, and individuality.

Madame Antonietta Rudge-Miller showed an advance in style and ability in her pianoforte playing at Bechstein Hall, on October 5.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society opened its season on October 7, with a splendid performance of 'Elijah,' under Mr. Allen Gill. The amount of original thought, coupled with broad expressiveness, shown in the treatment of this hackneyed work was a credit to all who took part. The principal soloists were Miss Carrie Tubbs, Miss Maud Wright, Mr. Ivor Walters, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

Herr Backhaus's pianoforte playing at Queen's Hall, on October 7, was as immaculate as usual. His programme included Beethoven's sonata, 'Les adieux, l'absence, et le retour.'

The Classical Concert Society opened its season at Bechstein Hall on October 11, with a concert in which wind-instrument playing provided the chief interest. Ludwig Thuille's Sextet for pianoforte, flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon was an interesting revival. Beethoven's Septet for strings and wind was also played. Miss Ellie Ney gave pianoforte solos. At the second concert, on October 18, Mrs. Carl Derenburg and Miss Fanny Davies played pianoforte duets, and Misses Edith McCullagh and Helen Anderton sang vocal duets.

Miss Gwynne Kimpton's second season of Orchestral Concerts for the Young opened at Steinway Hall on October 14. The lecturer on this occasion was Dr. Borland, who spoke about Handel's oratorios, with special reference to the significance of the overtures. The orchestra, under Miss Kimpton, played the overture to 'Samson,' Miss Mathilde Verne played Mendelssohn's 'Rondo Brillante,' and Mr. Foxton Ferguson sang.

Miss Florence Taylor, the rising contralto, and Miss Grace Humphrey (pianist) gave a recital at Æolian Hall on October 18.

At the concert given by the Royal College of Music, on October 19, Quartets by Haydn (Op. 54, No. 1) and Beethoven (Op. 74) were played; Misses Dora Horner and Katherine Ryan and Mr. George Baker gave vocal solos.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

The Philharmonic Society's season opened on October 13 with a miscellaneous concert, the chief attractions of which were Mischa Elman and Madame Carreño. The former had been several times in Belfast since his early appearance as an 'infant prodigy,' but the latter had never before visited the North of Ireland. It is needless to say that such a combination of talent drew a large audience, who may have heard as good, but never better, performers. Madame Jennie Norelli was the only singer engaged. The Society's choir sang 'Zadok the Priest' (an echo of the recent Coronation), Elgar's lovely unaccompanied part-song, 'My love dwelt in a Northern land,' and Mendelssohn's 'O great is the depth.'

It is to be hoped that this Society may secure ample public support, but there is no good in disguising the fact that competition of various kinds has made its financial position—like that of many English societies—rather an anxious one.

BIRMINGHAM.

The first concert of the current musical season took place in the Town Hall on September 16, given by the Birmingham District Goods Clerical Benevolent Society in connection with the L. & N.W. Railway Goods department, in aid of their funds. The solo vocalists were Madame Aston, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. Jesse Hackett, and Mr. Lindon Wyatt, all of whom did well in their respective choice of popular songs. Variety was given to the concert by the introduction of a number of part-songs by the Curzon Male-Voice Choir, under Mr. A. Ernest Maw's able training and conductorship. Great progress was shown from their previous efforts both as regards tone-quality and gradation of light and shade; indeed German's fine part-song, 'O peaceful night,' received a very finished and telling reading. The accompanist was Mr. George Halliley.

The Annual Musical Festival organized by the Birmingham Sunday School Union opened at the Town Hall on September 23, under Mr. Thomas Facer's conductorship, and lasted five days. The choir numbered six hundred voices, drawn from the Sunday schools affiliated with the Union, and was heard in a number of patriotic songs, part-songs, scenes, &c. The test-piece chosen at the competition was Myles B. Foster's 'The Moon.' These annual choral exhibitions naturally tend to encourage the cultivation of mass singing, and are a source of pleasure not only to the executive but also to their friends and the general public.

On September 27, an Irish Concert was given in the New Temperance Hall under the immediate patronage of the Irish clergy and laity of the city and district. The programme was entirely made up of Irish music, and the artistic personnel too was Irish, namely, Miss Eva O'Connor, Miss Winifred Day, Mr. John Lunn (vocalists), and Miss Linda Sheen, a violinist from Tasmania. A well-patronised concert was given in the large Central Hall on September 30 by the united choirs of the Birmingham, Cannock, Oakengates, Stirchley, Walsall and Worcester Co-operative Societies, numbering three hundred mixed voices, conducted by Mr. Hollins and Mr. Leech. The various part-songs performed were characterized by a splendid ensemble and tone-colour.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association inaugurated their season's concerts at the Town Hall, on October 7, by giving a concert performance of Edward German's opera 'Merrie England,' its repetition being due to the great success achieved on two former occasions. The singing of the choir was bright and vivid, and the orchestra played with great care and effect. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted with tact and judgment, and every praise is due to the principals, who did their work in an admirable manner. The artists included Miss Lilian Coomber, Madame Margaret Milward, Madame Eunice Fowles, Miss Grace Page, Mr. Ernest Ludlow, Mr. Ernest Davies and Mr. Albert Knight.

Since the famous combination of artists comprising Dr. Joachim, Signor Piatti, and Miss Fanny Davies, no finer trio players have been heard in Birmingham than Messrs. Kreisler, Casals and Bauer, who gave an ideal chamber concert in the Town Hall on September 29. The programme consisted of Beethoven's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello in B flat (Op. 97), Tchaikovsky's great Trio in A minor (Op. 50), and Mendelssohn's D minor Trio (Op. 49). The Town Hall, however, is not suited for a concert of that kind, and the tone of the strings was so delicate and sensitive that many passages could not be heard.

The first Harrison concert of the season drew a large audience to the Town Hall on October 9, the chief attraction being Madame Tétrazini, who had for her coadjutors Mr. Frank Webster, Mr. Robert Radford, Miss Flora Mann and Miss Lillian Berger (vocal duettists), Miss Edith Penville (flautist), Miss Mabel Moss (pianist). The Carl Rosa Opera Company gave a week's operatic season at the Prince of Wales Theatre, from October 9 to October 14, inclusive. The repertoire consisted of 'Carmen,' 'Faust,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Mignon,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Queen of Sheba,' and 'Trovatore.' The company is admirably constituted, and the principals, among whom were a great many new artists not heard here previously, are exceptionally good.

The first of a series of eight orchestral concerts promoted by the Birmingham Philharmonic Society was held at the Town Hall on October 18, under Mr. Thomas Beecham's conductorship. The programme was varied, and included several works new to local audiences, notably Ethel Smyth's Overture 'The Wreckers' and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite 'Antar.' A welcome item was Mozart's Symphony in D ('The Prague'). The orchestra responded well to the conductor's beat, and some splendid effects were realised. Miss Dorothy Silk was the vocalist.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society inaugurated their season's concerts at the Town Hall on October 19 by an impressive performance of Bach's monumental B minor Mass, under Dr. Sinclair's able conductorship. The feature of the performance was the magnificent singing of the choir, especially in the 'Cum Sanctu Spiritu,' the 'Crucifixus' and 'Sanctus,' which could hardly have been surpassed in vocal technique, in expression or tone-power. The principals were Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Hamilton Harris. Mr. C. W. Perkins was the organist.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The winter season has commenced under the happiest auspices, and there is every prospect of some highly successful concert giving. Year by year continued progress in the musical life of the town is shown, and it may truthfully be said that this pleasant seaside resort now stands unchallenged as the leading centre of musical thought in the extreme south of the Kingdom.

Orchestral music will, as of yore, find its principal outlet in the symphony and classical concerts, which are held in the Winter Garden's Pavilion on Thursdays and Mondays respectively from October until May. The symphony concerts are placed first, as they are of greater importance and more imposing proportions than the classical concerts. Mr. Dan Godfrey has arranged his programmes with his usual catholicity and seriousness of purpose, and the excellent Municipal Orchestra can be relied upon to provide performances at a high level of attainment.

The newly-formed Bournemouth Municipal Choral Society has issued its scheme for its introductory season. In order to place the Society on a firm basis the programmes have been drawn up on frankly popular lines, and will include Edward German's 'Merrie England,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' and an opera (not yet selected) by Sullivan or some other favourite composer. Dr. H. Holloway is the conductor of the Society.

The Poole and Parkstone Philharmonic Society will devote attention to Handel's 'Messiah,' and will consider the question, at a later time, of studying the compositions for the Dorset Choral Association's Festival. Mr. A. W. Russe, the Society's former conductor, having resigned his position, the duties will now be undertaken by Mr. A. E. Wilshire.

BRISTOL AND BATH.

On October 9, there was a concert of chamber music at the Victoria Rooms. Miss Fanny Davies (pianoforte) and Mr. Johan C. Hock (violoncello) played admirably the Sonata in G by J. S. Bach, and the Sonata in F (Op. 6) by Richard Strauss. The executants also gave pleasure in solos for their instruments. At intervals Miss Hermine Scholten demonstrated her vocal ability in songs which were accompanied by Mrs. Hock.

There was a crowded audience at the Victoria Rooms on October 16, when Herr Kreiser gave a recital. The eminent violinist was heard to advantage in Mendelssohn's Concerto and interesting compositions of the 17th and 18th centuries. Miss Roma Tremaine sang at intervals, and her excellent delivery of some attractive lyrics afforded much gratification. Mr. Haddon Squire was the accompanist.

The Bristol Musical Festival Choir have commenced, under the direction of Mr. George Risleigh, rehearsals for the Festival next October. The first work taken in hand was 'Caractacus' (Elgar). It is intended at the Festival to give a concert-performance of Wagner's 'Ring' in its entirety.

St. Luke's Choral Society, Bedminster (conductor Mr. Charles H. Bishop), are rehearsing Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's day.'

On October 18 there was a choral festival, under the auspices of the Bristol Diocesan Choral Union, at the church of St. Matthias-on-the-Weir. The choirs taking part were those of All Saints, St. Nicholas and St. Leonard, St. Jude, St. Matthias, St. Augustine, and St. Philip and Jacob, numbering in all about 150 voices. Mr. W. E. Fowler (All Saints) was at the organ, and Mr. A. Worrall conducted.

The season's musical activities at the Pump Room, Bath, carried out under the enterprising direction of Mr. Frank Tapp, promise to be of exceptional interest. A series of special monthly evening concerts has been arranged, in addition to the usual afternoon symphony concerts; and there are four National symphony concerts,—French, Russian, German, and English. At the first of these, which took place on October 7, Mlle. Speranza Calo sang, and César Franck's Symphony was performed. The Liszt Centenary was celebrated on October 19, with two concerts. In the afternoon, Miss Marie Novello played the B minor Sonata, and in the evening the 'Dante' symphony was performed.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

THE THREE TOWNS.

By slow degrees the new season is getting under weigh, though as yet the promises are more numerous than actual performances. As intimated last month, there are several new ventures, some of which have now come before the public. To go back to last month for a moment, mention must be made of a pianoforte recital given on September 21 at Plymouth by Miss Hilda Smart, in which importance was given to MacDowell's 'A.D. MDCXX,' a charming 'Serenade d'Arlequin,' by Schutt, and an 'Etude Mignonne,' by Percy Pitt. Miss Myrtle Ross was the vocalist.

The note of farewell has mingled with that of prediction, for on September 26 the band of the Leinster Regiment, which for several years has been stationed at Devonport and has added something to the life of that town, gave a farewell concert prior to departure for India for a long period. Mr. Ernest Beechey conducted a programme of pieces by Rossini, Wagner, and Saint-Saëns, and the vocalists were Miss Sybil Purchas and Mr. Hugh Peyton.

Pupils of Devonport High School for Girls gave performances of 'Antigone,' with Mendelssohn's music, on October 3. The good chorus-singing, especially that of the Theban maidens, was a special feature. The Plymouth Corporation Concerts, organized by the borough organist, Mr. H. Moreton, had an auspicious opening on October 7, the initial evening concert being attended by the Mayor and Corporation. These concerts, of good ballad order, are given every Saturday afternoon and evening during the winter, and are the occasions of visits of popular vocalists and instrumentalists to the town.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the appointment of the organist of Greenbank (Plymouth) Church, Mr. R. Lang, was celebrated by the choir on October 8 by a performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' conducted by Mr. Lang, with Mr. Harold Lake at the organ. The choir, as usual, sang with good tone and rhythm, and the orchestra, led by Mr. J. Wingate, was capable. The combined choirs of King Street Church and Sunday School and the Stonehouse Wesleyan Church gave a sacred concert on October 11, including choruses by Mendelssohn and anthems by Shelley and Gounod. Mr. Harold Woodward conducted, with Mr. Cecil Palmer at the organ.

Last year, on the eve of their first public appearance, the new Plymouth Philharmonic String Quartet had to abandon operations on account of the sudden illness of their leader, Mr. Percy Lowman. Without further mishap or any of the usual bad results of postponement, the new combination gave a tentative concert on October 12 to test the temper of the public before deciding whether or not to constitute themselves on a permanent basis. Mr. Lowman's collaborators are Messrs. Alfred Serle, Reginald Ball and Charles Pike. They were bold enough to risk putting Debussy before a Plymouth audience, but so close to perfection was their playing of the Quartet, Op. 10, that no doubt remained of the justification of their enterprise or of the appreciation of their hearers. The ensemble in the first three movements at least, was quite perfect, and the interpretation gave a clear revelation of the Debussian style. A Schumann number (Op. 43, No. 1) was less successful, but still creditable, and it is much to be hoped that the combination will assume permanence and thus hold a unique position in the Three Towns.

Mr. J. W. Newton, conductor of the band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, will begin a new series of symphony concerts in Stonehouse on November 7. Mr. R. G. Evans's symphony concerts will re-open a few days previously—November 3—and whispers are in the air that the public will have regular and frequent opportunities of hearing the fine band of the Royal Garrison Artillery during the winter.

DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

News comes from Exeter that the Oratorio Society have decided to adopt 'The Creation,' 'The Bride of Dunkerron,' and 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' for work during the winter, with performances in the spring, and Mr. Allan Allen's Exeter Choral Society are also engaged in oratorio.

An exceedingly interesting concert was given at Tavistock on September 27 by the Langley-Mukle Quartet, who repeated the programme on succeeding days at Teignmouth and Torquay. A one-movement work for string quartet by Balfour Gardiner, still in MS., was a novelty which at once by its coherence, attractive subject-matter and treatment achieved favour and created the desire to hear it again. Rumour says that as a result of the repeated visit of this fine quartet party to Teignmouth, local performers are anxious to start a chamber music society in the town. New organs were opened on October 18 respectively in Beaminster Church by Mr. Trotman (Torquay) and in St. Luke's, Buckfastleigh, by Mr. Martin.

At the annual meeting of Newton Choral Society, which Society was last year suspended owing to lack of interest on the part of members and public, it was decided to resume rehearsals of 'Martha' under Mr. W. J. Bown, conductor, and give a concert performance at Christmas.

CORNWALL.

Liskeard Choral Society, through lack of support, was threatened with dissolution at the end of last season, when the additional blow fell on them of the resignation of their conductor, Mr. A. C. Faull, who had been with them through a long term of vicissitudes years. We are glad to be able to announce, however, that Mr. Walter Weekes has been appointed conductor and, provided a minimum of sixty-five ordinary subscribing members can be secured, the Society will continue its useful work. Marazion Male-Voice Choir gave a concert on October 6.

In St. Tudy Parish Church an organ recital was given on October 4, by Mr. Alfred Worth, the organist, with vocal assistance from Miss Gertrude Woodward. New organs were opened at Hugas (by Mrs. Jenkins and Mr. W. B. Dunn, the Chacewater Choir singing special music, with Miss Carbis and others as soloists), on October 12, and at Gunnislake on October 18, by Mr. John Hele.

We are glad to hear that Mr. George Henschel has consented to undertake the conductorship of the Magpie Madrigal Society, which Mr. Lionel Benson carried on so long and successfully until his recent retirement, and that in consequence the Society will continue its existence.

DUBLIN.

On October 12, in the Theatre Royal, Madame Carreño and Mischa Elman played Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' sonata before a full house. On October 18 and 21, Fritz Kreisler gave recitals in the Antient Concert Rooms. On October 11, Mr. Alfred Hollins gave an organ recital on the new Walker organ in the Unitarian Church, Stephen's Green.

The annual general meeting of the Feis Ceoil Association was held on Monday, October 16, in the Mansion House, the Right Hon. The Attorney-General in the chair. The speakers included The Right Hon. M. F. Cox, M.D., Rev. Professor George O'Neill, Rev. H. Bewerunge, and Mr. Edward Martyn. The report on the festival held last May shows a profit of £62 10s. 3d.

On October 17, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and party, including Mr. William Dever, Miss Edith Evans, and Miss Nora O'Hea (violinist), gave an afternoon concert at the Gaiety Theatre. The programme included a costume recital of the second act of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah.'

The Sunday Orchestral Societies seventh season (conductor Dr. Esposito) began on October 22, and the Royal Dublin Society's chamber music recitals on October 30.

EDINBURGH.

In issuing the prospectus and sketch programmes of their twenty-fifth series of orchestral concerts, Messrs. Paterson & Sons enclose a pamphlet entitled 'Twenty-five years of Orchestral Music in Edinburgh,' in which they give an interesting survey of their efforts to foster the appreciation of orchestral music in Scotland. For the present season's concerts the Scottish Orchestra has again been engaged with M. Mlynarski as conductor and Mr. Henri Verbruggen as leader. The prospectus states that, with the exception of Handel, there is no outstanding writer of the last two centuries whose name does not find at least one place in this season's programmes. At the tenth concert M. Zacharewitsch will play Elgar's Violin concerto, and among other works which will be heard for the first time at these concerts, are the G minor Symphony of Mr. Von Ahn Carse; the Festival Overture of Dr. Walford Davies; and Mr. Granville Bantock's concert overture 'The Pierrot of the Minute.'

The various choral societies in the city have begun work again. The Royal Choral Union, conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson, are preparing for their concert in March, Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' and Parts I. and II. of 'The Creation.' Mr. John Kirkhope's Choir are studying Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' and Mr. Moonie's Choir have in hand Verdi's 'Stabat Mater,' MacCunn's 'Lay of the last minstrel,' and Félicien David's 'The Desert.'

Among concerts which have been given during the month have been a recital by Madame Carreño and Mr. Mischa Elman in the Music Hall on October 7; a chamber music concert by Messrs. Kreisler, Casals, and Bauer in the M'Ewan Hall on October 7, and a song recital by Mr. Robert Burnett, assisted by Miss E. Buchanan, violinist, in the Music Hall, on October 14.

The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. T. H. Collinson, have chosen Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte concerto, and Beethoven's Violin concerto as the chief works at their three concerts to be given on November 22, February 12, and April 1.

GLASGOW.

To the list of prospective programmes given last month the following may be added: Glasgow Grand Opera Society (Mr. R. Hutton Malcolm, conductor), Gounod's 'Faust' and Bizet's 'Carmen'; Hamilton Choral Union (Mr. T. S. Drummond, conductor), 'The Golden Legend,' and some shorter works. The Quinlan Opera Company announce a fortnight's performances, the repertoire embracing twelve different operas. A notable feature of the 'Exhibition' music was the first performance of Dr. Arthur Somervell's incidental music to Professor McNeil Dixon's pageant-play 'Thomas the Rhymer.' The work, which is quite characteristic of the composer, includes two 'fairy' solos, a three-part chorus, and a chorus in unison. The dainty scoring of the orchestral part is quite charming, and the composition, possibly with some modifications and additions, would make a very effective orchestral suite. In the hands of an excellent band conducted by Mr. E. K. Joachim and choir trained by Mr. Forbes Forsyth, the music received a fine interpretation. The 'Exhibition' music has this month included performances (twice daily) by the Scottish Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Emil Mlynarski, which have attracted large audiences.

In the formation of the Greenock Musical Association, stimulus has been given to the cause of music in a large industrial centre where of late years matters musical have not been too flourishing. Among the objects of the Association are the establishing of singing classes, the promotion of choral and orchestral competitions, chamber concerts, recitals, and lectures, &c. As a first step the promoters have already organized some singing classes, and an attractive course of lectures on musical topics.

Under the chairmanship of Sir John Stirling-Maxwell, Bart., a public meeting was held on October 7, at which a report of the recent Choral (Competitive) Festival was submitted. It was resolved to hold another Festival in April, 1912, and an executive committee was appointed to carry out the arrangements.

The only music-makings to be recorded this month are an excellent pianoforte recital by Madame Carreño, and the first of this season's Harrison Concerts, at which Madame Tetrassini was the leading attraction.

LIVERPOOL.

Dr. George J. Bennett, of Lincoln, has accepted the invitation of the Liverpool Church Choir Association to be present at their eleventh festival on December 7, when he will conduct his Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat, and anthem for tenor solo and chorus, 'My God, I love Thee.' Dr. Bennett acted as adjudicator for the Committee upon the compositions sent in anonymously by local composers. His choice fell upon an anthem, 'For all the saints,' written by Dr. C. T. Reynolds, of Birkenhead, whose work therefore appears in the Festival book together with Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, Best's 'The Lord is great in Zion,' and Handel's 'Zadok.' Tchaikovsky's 'Hymn to the Trinity' has been chosen for the unaccompanied item.

Three eminent artists—MM. Kreisler, Casals and Harold Bauer—at their concert on September 30, gave memorable interpretations of three trios—Beethoven's in B flat, Op. 97, Tchaikovsky's in A minor, Op. 50, and Mendelssohn's in D minor, Op. 49. Individually the players are well-known masters of their respective instruments. Their ensemble playing was no less remarkable as that of musicians whose chief objective was the expression of the spirit of the music.

The seventy-third season of the Philharmonic Society was successfully inaugurated on October 10, by a concert at which Mischa Elman played Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and also two solos of the virtuoso order which were admirably accompanied at the pianoforte by Sir Frederic Cowen, whose appearance after his long and serious illness was hailed with evident pleasure. At the general rehearsal on the previous evening the good-will of the choir was voiced by Mr. Towers, one of the senior chorists. Sir Frederic, who was evidently moved, made an appropriate reply.

The fine orchestra of the Society, led by Mr. Rawdon Briggs, was heard to advantage in the 'Egmont' Overture, Dvořák's 'From the new world' Symphony, German's exhilarating 'Welsh Rhapsody,' and Jarnefelt's 'Preludium,' which on this occasion served as a Postlude. The choir sang Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music'—a constructively effective piece—with considerable power and expression.

The conduct of these famous concerts has been receiving considerable criticism in the local papers from 'proprietors' and 'subscribers,' chiefly anonymous, who find fault with the committee for various sins of omission and commission. The writers appear to belong to a class who think the world would be a better place if they had a chance in its ordering. It is certain that the committee have a difficult task in pleasing the musical few and the unmusical many in combination. With the concerts commencing at a quarter to eight o'clock, and carriages ordered for ten o'clock, the committee have to arrange for at least a symphony, a concerto, solos by either vocalists or instrumentalists, a choral item or two, and an interval of twenty minutes, all within two hours and a quarter. They have also to weigh a love of the old music with the claims of the new, in view of a musical competition unknown in the old days. In essaying these problems they probably have the sympathy and support of all reasonable people.

An audience which filled every corner of the Philharmonic Hall, on October 11, attended the first Harrison Concert, at which Madame Tetrassini sang Verdi's 'Ritorni vincitor' and the Polonaise from 'Mignon'—a dazzling performance. The great singer was less at home with 'The last rose of summer,' sung in English. A strong vocal company included Miss Flora Mann and Miss Lillian Berger, very acceptably heard in duets, Mr. Frank Webster and Mr. Radford, with Miss Mabel Moss (solo pianoforte), Miss Edith Penville an excellent flautist, and Mr. R. J. Forbes an able accompanist. The programme, which contained fifteen items, extended to at least double that number—a sufficient testimony to Mr. Percy Harrison's enterprise and discernment.

Very marked appreciation and support was given to the admirable performances by the Quinlan Opera Company, whose provincial tour began at the Royal Court Theatre and continued for a fortnight from October 2. The theatre was crowded nightly at enhanced prices, and Mr. Quinlan's policy in presenting operas with exceptional vocal principals, an adequate orchestra, and an excellent chorus, met with universal approval. Judging by the enthusiasm which attended the performance of Wagner's 'Valkyrie' on the opening night, it is thought likely that the projected performances of the 'Ring' which fell through last season will take place sooner than was anticipated. For the 'Valkyrie' performance honourable mention is due of Miss Agnes Nicholls (Brunnhilde), Miss Edna Thornton (Fricka), Mr. John Harrison (Siegmund), and Mr. Clarence Whitehill (Wotan). Mr. Cuthbert Hawley conducted. Other works presented were 'Carmen,' with Miss Muriel Terry and Mr. John Coates in the principal rôles, 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Faust.' Even more potent public attractions were 'Tales of Hoffmann,' 'Madame Butterfly,' and 'The Girl of the Golden West,' at the production of which the composer was present. The work was performed in English for the first time. The Lord Mayor extended the hospitality of the Town Hall to Signor Puccini, who was most cordially received at the theatre, although his opera is not considered equal in merit to his earlier works. 'Aida' and 'Hänsel und Gretel' (preceded by Debussy's 'L'enfant prodigue') completed the list.

A young local tenor, Mr. Ronald Nicholson, received an encouraging reception at his début in the Rushworth Hall on October 7, when he showed evidences of good taste and training in three groups of songs of varying styles.

For his recital in the Philharmonic Hall on October 14, Mr. Backhaus selected an interesting programme which contained Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, 'Les adieux, l'absence, et le retour,' Schumann's Fantasia, Op. 17, and a Chopin selection.

The Rodewald Concert Club was inaugurated on October 16 in the Carlton Hall, by a chamber concert given under informal social conditions by the Rawdon-Briggs String Quartet, who were heard in Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 59, No. 1, and in a String quartet by Ippolito-Iwanoff, Op. 13, played for the first time here. The Club, which by its name perpetuates the memory of the late A. E. Rodewald, an amateur who did much for orchestral music in Liverpool, has already enrolled 150 members.

The enjoyable Akeroyd Symphony Orchestra concerts were resumed on October 17, when the audience were again enthralled by Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, and no less by the brilliant playing of the 'William Tell' Overture. Johann Strauss's Suite, 'Ritter Pasman,' was heard for the first time here. The vocalist was Mr. Fraser Gange. Mr. Luiz Figueras showed skill in violoncello solos, Dr. Stanley Dale accompanied, and Mr. Vasco Akeroyd conducted.

A successful vocal recital was given in the Rushworth Hall on October 17 by Miss Kate Reynolds, a soprano singer of considerable gifts.

Under Mr. Appleyard's able direction two of his Choral Societies—the Waterloo Choral and the Cloughton St. Cecilia—are both engaged in preparing the same works, Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'A tale of old Japan.'

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The issue of the Hallé Concerts prospectus has added little to our knowledge; it has evidently proved very difficult to get the conductors to give even a skeleton outline of their programmes, this being conspicuously the case with Gabrilovich, Beecham, Müller-Reuter and Schalk, Percy Pitt and Holländer. Balling starts the season with a Beethoven and Wagner programme; Oskar Fried conducts the 'Choral Symphony'; Landon Ronald a Tchaikovsky symphony and Gustav von Holst's 'Somerset Rhapsody' (which is also being done by Vasco Akeroyd in Liverpool). Bantock takes the first performance of his new Choral symphony—Part I. for male voices, Part III. for female voices (12 parts), and Parts II. and IV. for mixed voices (20 parts)—on January 25, and Delius's 'Appalachia' variations will also be heard. It would be well if he could be prevailed upon to give us his new 'Dante and Beatrice': indeed, a Bantock orchestral evening would prove rather an eye-opener to the habitués of the Hallé concerts. Sir Henry Wood's programme will be drawn from Elgar, Mozart, Beethoven, Bantock, Dukas, and Rimsky-Korsakoff. Sir Frederick Bridge takes the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah.' Two of the concerts are to be of the miscellaneous order, Vaisey and Pugno appearing at the first of them on October 26, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford and Miss Clara Butt at the first concert of the New Year, January 11. One very important novelty will be Max Reger's orchestral 'Variations on a Merry theme by Adam Hiller,' arrangements having been made for Schalk of Vienna to conduct this.

A crowded house greeted Michael Balling on October 19, at the inaugural concert of the Hallé season. His Beethoven and Wagner readings kept the audience on the qui vive all the evening, and the orchestra played in alert style than has been known here for some time past: before the end of the season they will be more of a virtuoso band, responsive to every shade of the conductor's feeling. Balling's Beethoven was vividly illuminating. Wagner somewhere represents the shade of Beethoven haranguing a conductor of the C minor Symphony: 'Hold thou my fermate (pauses) long and terribly!' No conductor has held them as did Balling, nor made evident in such convincing manner their tremendous significance—and this in no merely rhetorical way. The Paris version of the Venusberg Bacchanale set forth his powers in the strongest possible light; this, one felt, was distinctly his mielieu.

The Manchester Musical Society's first annual report points out that the greater proportion of the works given at the eleven concerts of last winter had either never been heard before in Manchester, or so seldom as to be practically unknown.

During the coming season four public concerts will be given entirely devoted to the works of Granville Bantock (November 10), Vaughan Williams, Joseph Holbrooke, and Rutland Boughton. In addition to these, eight House Concerts will be held in the Society's rooms, programmes having been promised by leading Manchester musicians.

Sir Henry Wood again conducts the four orchestral concerts of the Gentlemen's series, the remaining four being of the recital type. Not the least interesting of the orchestral concerts will be that of December 9, when Miss Say Ashworth's Ancoats Institute Female-Voice Choir will sing under Sir Henry Wood's direction Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel,' Berlioz's 'Ophelia,' Schubert's 'God in Nature,' Elgar's 'The Snow' and 'Fly, singing bird,' and the early Brahms choruses for female-voice choir, horns and harp. It is good to find the executive of Manchester's venerable Society thus honouring a work which has been carried on so unostentatiously amongst the factory girls of Cottonopolis. It was after hearing this choir sing that Mr. Frederic Corder said 'I have heard choirs of mill-girls sing so beautifully that I wondered what could be left for the angels to do.'

For Bauer, Casals and Kreisler to come here, heralded as the greatest trio that had visited Manchester, was a distinct challenge to those who could recall Sir Charles and Lady Hallé and Piatti—still, the performers are not to blame for indiscretions of an advertising manager, and the playing of the great Beethoven, Mozart and Tchaikovsky trios was a constant delight.

On October 9, the Brodsky Quartet opened the series of concerts in connection with the Ancoats Brotherhood Recreation Committee, playing Mozart's C major, Beethoven's G major (Op. 18), and Haydn's 'Emperor' quartets, and earned whole-hearted appreciation.

On October 11, came Mr. James Richardson's annual violoncello recital; after the early Reger Sonatas given in former years, came the A minor (Op. 116) and also Donald F. Tovey's 'In memoriam Robert Hausmann' variations. At the pianoforte Miss Edith Webster joined the recitalist, and Miss Jessie Barlow was the vocalist.

The Manchester Orpheus Glee Society's concert on October 18 was an unqualified success. Starting their night's work with two specimens of the old glee writers which found such favour in the Rhineland provinces last Whit-week, they sang amongst other items the Blackpool Festival test-pieces of the previous week, and in much finer fashion, too; Strauss's 'Old German battle-song' and Bantock's 'Lucifer in Starlight' thrilled the audience. Additional artistic significance was given to the concert by the singing of two Max Reger part-songs: 'An das Meer' and 'Freude Soll,' from the Opus 83, translations of which had been prepared by Mr. Samuel Langford, the great apostle of Reger in Manchester. Never before had these been performed in England, but ere another twelve-month has passed they are likely to be household words in South-East and North-East Lancashire. Miss Myra Dixon, a young contralto from Bolton (who has won considerable renown in the solo classes at the last two Blackpool Festivals) sang in Manchester for the first time; she has the makings of a really first-rank vocalist.

The Royal College of Music commenced the new year with two important changes in its staff of professors; Miss Lillie Wormald retiring on her recent marriage and being succeeded by another old student Miss Sarah Andrew as teacher of singing, and Mr. Frank Merrick following Mr. Egon Petri.

The amount of musical endeavour going on very unostentatiously in Lancashire outside our big centres is remarkable. Within easy reach, say an hour's journey, of Manchester, are Bury, Bolton, Blackburn, Accrington, Burnley, Nelson, Colne, Bacup, Warrington, Wigan, Preston, Lancaster, Southport, Oldham, Ashton-under-Lyne, Stalybridge, Stockport. In all, or nearly all, of these towns will be found one or more choral societies, chamber-concerts, orchestral societies, both light and 'grand' operatic societies, and often enough smaller societies identified with the larger churches. Only a few typical features of this work may be touched upon here. In Preston Dr. Baird's Society has boldly thrown over the 'Messiah' on Boxing Day in favour of 'Elijah.' Next March they will give Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion.

In Bolton the two principal choral societies are conducted by Mr. Charles Risegari and Mr. Herbert Whittaker. The Philharmonic, under the former gentleman, will revive Goring Thomas's 'Swan and the skylark,' and the Choral Union are to utilise Mr. Whittaker's special qualifications for preparing choral recitals arranged in historical sequence. The Amateur Orchestral Society of this town, under Mr. Andrew Morris, will play Delius's 'Paris' tone-poem (probably for the first time in the County Palatine).

The series of Friday mid-day organ recitals in the Cathedral (which proved so unexpectedly attractive last March) were resumed on October 13, and are to be continued weekly from 1.10 to 1.50, Mr. S. H. Nicholson playing alternately with distinguished visiting organists who include Dr. W. G. Alcock (H.M. Chapels Royal), Mr. H. G. Ley (Christ Church, Oxford), Mr. T. Tertius Noble (York), Dr. Sinclair (Hereford), Mr. A. W. Wilson (Ely).

On October 9, the cantata 'Undine,' by Granville Humphreys, was again given in Manchester, this time under the auspices of the Manchester Nonconformist Choir Union. It was conducted by the composer. The solos, which demand a rather high degree of efficiency, were in the safe hands of Madame Sadler Fogg, Miss Gladys Harwood, Mr. Albert J. Holt, Mr. Horace Brown, and Mr. A. R. Parker. Miss Margaret Furness was the accompanist.

Mr. Charles J. Bishenden will give a series of invitation concert-lectures on 'Old British composers and singers of their time' at 105, New Oxford Street. On November 2, he will repeat his successful Purcell concert-lecture of last May.

NEWCASTLE ON TYNE AND DISTRICT.

The first concert of the Chamber Music Society, a pianoforte recital by Rachmaninoff, varied by songs contributed by Mr. Francis Harford, all the music being from the pen of the pianist, unfortunately clashed with one of the most interesting nights of the Quinlan Opera Company. Of the other five concerts to be provided by this Society, four will be string quartet evenings, by the Flonaley, Sevcik, Brussels and Walenn combinations, and the other will be a miscellaneous programme.

The arrangements of the Classical Concert Society include a pianoforte and vocal recital by Miss Stockmarr and Miss Ellen Beck, a pianoforte quartet concert by Mr. Thomas Dunhill, Miss Hayward, and Messrs. F. Bridge and E. Mason, at which we are to have one of our few opportunities of hearing some modern British chamber music (Hurlstone, Bridge and Dunhill are to be represented), an evening of old music by the Société des Concerts d'autrefois, and a concert by the Langley-Mukle String Quartet.

Backhaus gave a pianoforte recital on October 9; in addition to the usual material submitted by a travelling virtuoso, the programme contained Schumann's great Fantasia in C, and Debussy's 'Jardins sous la pluie.' As pianoforte recitalists are notoriously the most conservative of concert givers in their choice of music, it is interesting to notice how the perfect and delicious pianoforte pieces of the most eminent of French composers of the day are becoming more popular.

The Quinlan Opera Company had a most successful week, beginning on October 5. The castes were exceptionally high in standard, perhaps the finest being on the first night, when 'Valkyrie' was given. Madame Agnes Nicholls was superb as Brünnhilde, her beautiful voice being always a delight to the ear, and Mr. Whitehill's interpretation of the part of the long-suffering god Wotan was extremely fine. Mr. John Harrison was excellent as Siegmund. One may perhaps be allowed to grumble at the preponderance given to Italian opera, but one must be grateful for the production of 'Valkyrie,' the première of Debussy's pleasing early cantata, 'The Prodigal Son,' and the revival of Humperdinck's delightful and ingenious 'Hänsel und Gretel.' The programme as a whole was superior to our usual operatic fare, and the level of the performance so high that it was a memorable week.

Owing to the clashing of dates with the opera week, it is not possible to give any account of Mr. Rutland Boughton's lecture at the Literary and Philosophical Society on 'Music of the Future.' It suffices to say that he kept a crowded audience rapt from start to finish.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

On October 5, we had a welcome visit from Mischa Elman and Backhaus. On October 12, a concert given by Miss Lizzie Parsons (pianist) and Miss Augustine Bisiaux (violinist) flattered our pride in local talent. A drawing-room concert was given on October 16, by Mr. Archie Rosenthal and Madame Blanche Marchesi.

The first of the Subscription Concerts opened on October 18, with a programme by the Hallé Orchestra under the baton of Michael Balling, with Zacharewitsch as solo-violinist. The pièce de résistance was Elgar's Violin concerto, which was excellently performed and created a wonderful impression. The other items of the programme were the 'Meistersinger' Overture, the 'Pastoral' Symphony, and Dukas's Scherzo 'L'apprenti sorcier.'

The Lecture Concerts at the University College commenced their season on October 19, when Mr. Bernard Johnson took as his subject 'Music of the Nations,' illustrating the gradual development and characteristics of national song. Miss Edith Shipley and the male representatives of the College Students' Choir, presented a programme of considerable length, variety, and interest.

The Croydon Symphony Orchestra has been formed with Herr Heinrich Krause as conductor and Mr. W. A. Sanders (address: Public Hall, Croydon) as secretary. There are still vacancies which first-class amateurs are invited to fill. A series of monthly Promenade Concerts has been arranged, commencing on November 1.

YORKSHIRE.

Up to now there is but little to record in the way of music in Yorkshire. Huddersfield has begun operations at an early date, its first subscription concert, at which the Grenadier Guards band appeared, being on September 26, while on October 17, Madame Carreño and Miss Marie Hall took part in the second concert of the series. On October 7, the Huddersfield Philharmonic Society, an almost entirely amateur orchestra, gave a concert under Mr. Ibsen's direction, the programme of which was on 'popular' lines, the only piece of importance being the slow movement from Beethoven's C minor Symphony. Under the same conductor, the excellent choir of the Glee and Madrigal Society was heard on October 10, and sang a number of pieces in highly-finished style, part-songs by Elgar and Bantock being, perhaps, their most conspicuously successful efforts. Miss Miriam Timothy's artistic harp-playing was a feature of this concert.

Mr. Hubert Bath's 'The wedding of Shon Maclean' is having a run among the Northern societies: the Wakefield Choral Society, a young body conducted by Mr. Percy Bligh, gave the work at their opening concert on October 4, and sang it with much spirit, the soloists being Miss Abson and Mr. Hayle. It was again performed by the Bradford Festival Choral Society on October 13, together with the 'Hymn of Praise,' a somewhat strange association. Sir Frederic Cowen conducted, and the principals were Miss Nellie Judson, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Joseph Lyceat.

Kreisler, Casals, and Harold Bauer visited Bradford on October 5, and Leeds the next evening and, sad to say, attracted but small audiences, though they roused great enthusiasm by their finished playing of Trios by Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn. The first of the Bradford Subscription concerts took place on October 20, when Mr. Balling, who is the first of the series of conductors appearing at Manchester this season, directed a fine performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, together with some Wagner pieces,—in fact quite a typical 'Richter programme.' Miss Alice Wilna was the vocalist. On the same evening Messrs. Harold Mason and Edward Maude began a series of recitals at Leeds, at which they propose to play a number of Pianoforte and Violin Sonatas, and on October 13 a series of string quartet concerts was begun at Halifax by the Rawdon-Briggs Quartet party, the programmes of which are properly confined to the classics, since Halifax has a good deal of lee-way to make up before it is ripe enough to discuss more advanced contemporary chamber music.

For the coming season the Leeds Philharmonic Society are preparing Bantock's 'Omar Khayyâm' (Part II.), Mozart's 'Requiem,' and Sir Edward Elgar is to conduct his new Symphony, while at another concert his Violin concerto will be produced, with Mr. John Dunn as soloist. The Leeds Choral Union are to give Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' 'Elijah,' and Cowen's important work, 'The Veil.' Among the chief features of the Bradford Subscription Concerts will be Berlioz's 'Faust,' conducted by Prof. Müller-Reuter, Elgar's Violin concerto, played by Kreisler, and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, conducted by Mr. Gabrilowitsch. The Bradford Festival Choral Society, of which Sir Frederic Cowen is the conductor, will give his work 'The Veil,' and the Bradford Old Choral Society promise nothing more novel than 'Creation,' 'Walpurgis Night,' and 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The Hull Harmonic Society are giving 'The wedding of Shon Maclean' for the first time in Hull, and, by way of a counterpoise to such novelty, announce a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' while the Hull Vocal Society promise the first performance in the town of Bach's B minor Mass. 'Walpurgis Night' and Gade's 'Crusaders' are among the features of the Middlesbrough Musical Union's prospectus. 'Shon Maclean' is to make its début at Halifax under the auspices of the Halifax Choral Society, and 'The Dream of Gerontius' is also to be given, strange to say, for the first time at Halifax, while at Huddersfield the Choral Society are giving nothing newer than Brahms's 'German Requiem'—'Elijah' and 'The Hymn of Praise' forming the rest of the programme. In this, as in most cases, 'Messiah' must be added as the invariable Christmas celebration.

Alderman E. W. Taylor, Mus. Doc., has been elected Mayor of Stafford for 1912.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BANGALORE.—On September 9, a literary and musical entertainment was given under the management of Mrs. Hugh Lee, consisting of recitations from Longfellow and performances of music connected with his poetry. The latter included a number of settings of his familiar lyrics and an excerpt from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' This excellent idea was well carried out by a numerous company of artists.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton and Hove Sacred Harmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Robert Taylor) have chosen 'Samson' (November 2), Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon Suite' (February 8), 'King Olaf' (March 14), and 'The Messiah' (Good Friday), as their programme for the season. Six concerts of chamber music have been arranged to take place at the Royal Pavilion. The programmes have the following headings:—Schumann (November 11), British (November 25), Miscellaneous (December 9), Brahms (January 27), French (February 10), and Miscellaneous (February 24). Miss Edith Kirkwood and the Langley-Mukle Quartet will take part. The series is under the management of Mr. Barry Namee.

CALGARY (CANADA).—Upon her return from England, Mrs. Annie Glen Broder gave an address before the Canadian Club descriptive of the Coronation of King George V. and Queen Mary as she witnessed it in Westminster Abbey, minutely explaining the symbolism of the service, more especially in regard to the musical part of the ceremonial as arranged by Sir Frederick Bridge.—At a recital in the Heintzman Hall, October 10, by pianoforte students who had passed the advanced examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music, a selected choir of ladies sang 'The rhyme of the four birds' (Sir Alexander Mackenzie) and 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar). The 'Kreutzer' sonata (Beethoven) was played by Mrs. Dudley Smith and Mrs. Broder, and a selection of lyrics was sung by Mr. Rhynid Jamieson (a vocal pupil of Dr. Ham, of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto), accompanied by Mr. G. E. Holt, Member of the council of the Canadian Guild of Organists and organist of the Cathedral of the Redeemer, Calgary.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave a concert on August 21, when the choir sang Elgar's 'O happy eyes,' Purcell's 'Come, if you dare,' and Cowen's 'Rowing homewards.' The critic of The Press wrote: 'After all, the seed sown by the Sheffield Choir shows signs of vitality; for a wonder, a part-song was encored last night.'

JOHANNESBURG.—At the 110th meeting of the Musical Society, which took place at the Caledonian Hall on September 13, the Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. F. W. Peters, supplied the bulk of the programme. The chief works, in which the orchestra's high capabilities were well displayed, were Elgar's fourth 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, Weber's 'Freischütz' overture, and the orchestral version of Rachmaninoff's C sharp minor Prelude. Madame Watkins Allen and Mr. J. Moore supplied vocal items.

NEWPORT.—On October 17, Mr. E. G. R. Richards opened the season with an orchestral concert at which movements from Beethoven's first Symphony formed the chief number. The overtures to 'Der Freischütz' and 'The Flying Dutchman' were other works in which the orchestra displayed its solid capabilities. Mr. Daniel Beddoe gained ready acceptance for his singing, and Miss Edith Gunter and Mr. H. Wostenholme were also successful. Miss Eileen Richards played accompaniments.

SHEFFIELD.—The singing class connected with Holy Trinity Church, Wicker, gave a concert on September 30. The choral programme consisted of anthems, including S. S. Wesley's 'O Lord, my God,' and part-songs. A number of songs were given, and Mr. John Parr, the conductor of the choir, besides contributing to these, played the bassoon part of Mr. Edmondstoune Duncan's 'Variations on a theme of Schubert' for bassoon and pianoforte. Miss E. Turner was the accompanist.

SOUTHBOROUGH.—The new Musical Society recently formed here is fortunate in commencing its career with many influential residents as patrons, and much local interest has been evinced in the effort to provide for a long-felt musical want in the town, by giving performances of standard choral works. Mr. G. A. Boulter has been appointed conductor, and Miss Mildred Marston hon. secretary to the Society.

SOUTHPORT.—The Vocal Union Male Choir gave the third of the present series of Bohemian Concerts on Friday, October 13, in the Concert Hall of the Prince of Wales's Hotel, when an excellent performance of part-songs by Schumann, Scharwenka, Dudley Buck, Edward German, and others, was given under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Clarke. The Abbey Quartette, first-prize winners at the recent Blackpool Musical Festival, gave their test-pieces with great effect. Several songs and violin solos completed a very interesting programme.

STRETFORD.—An evening with Mendelssohn' was held at the Town Hall on October 11, under the direction of Mr. J. Banning, who supplied accompaniments for the six vocalists and for Mr. G. E. Cinganeli (violinist). Mr. W. O. West gave organ solos, including the third Sonata. An orchestra under Mr. G. Cinganeli played the 'Athalia' and 'Melusina' overtures.

SYDNEY.—The Radwick District Musical Society, consisting of an orchestra of seventeen and a choir of thirty-four, gave an enterprising and successful concert on August 19. Their performance of MacCunn's 'The wreck of the Hesperus' was highly creditable. The choral programme also included Elgar's 'Spanish serenade' and glees by Pearsall, Spofforth, and Bishop. The soloists were Miss Leonore Gotsch, and Mr. Carl Gotsch (violinist). Mr. G. G. Park conducted.

Foreign Notes.

LISZT CELEBRATIONS.

The programme of the great Liszt Festival at Buda-Pesth, commencing on October 21, was arranged as follows:

October 21: In the morning, the Hungarian Coronation Mass at the Coronation Church, conducted by M. Szikla, with Professor Jenő Hubay as violin soloist. In the evening, 'Die Legende der heiligen Elisabeth,' at the Royal Opera.

October 22: Part-songs sung by the Chöreverein Ungarischer Frauen. Pianoforte works played by Karl Aggházy, Eugen d'Albert, Arthur Friedheim, Aladár Juhász, and Frederic Lamond. Songs sung by Lula Myscz-Gmeiner.

October 23: Pianoforte works played by Moriz Rosenthal, Emil Sauer, Stavenhagen, Vera Irmannoff, Árpád Szendy, and Stefan Thoman. Songs sung by Tilly Koenen.

October 24: 13th Psalm (tenor solo, Herr Karl Burrian), the Pianoforte concerto in A major, with Madame Sofie Menter as soloist, and the 'Faust' symphony, played by the Philharmonic Orchestra under the composer's grandson, Siegfried Wagner.

October 25: The oratorio 'Christus,' under the direction of Herr Stefan Kerner. Banquet given by the municipal authorities in honour of the artists; receptions given at the Court and by the Prime Minister.

At the Court Theatre, in Weimar, a place closely connected with the master's artistic activities, two Festival Concerts will be held. The symphonic poem 'Hungaria,' the 'Faust' symphony, and the 'Legend of St. Elisabeth,' are among the compositions to be performed.

The second concert of the Sollersche Musikverein in Erfurt will be devoted to a performance of the 'Legend of St. Elisabeth.'

A Liszt festival is to take place in Pressburg during November 10-26. Among the works down for performance are the 'Graner Festmesse,' the unaccompanied choruses 'Szozat' and 'Hymnus,' the symphonic poem 'Festklänge,' the Requiem and the Hungarian Coronation Mass.—On Liszt's birthday, October 22, the stage version of the 'Legend of St. Elisabeth' was to be given at the Munich Court Opera.—At the Conservatoire concerts at Nancy, the following works by Liszt were promised during the season: 'The Legend of St. Elisabeth,' the 'Faust' symphony, the 13th Psalm, the 'Totentanz' for pianoforte and orchestra, and one or two of the symphonic poems.—A Liszt festival will also be given at Geneva, under the direction of Herr Bernhard Stavenhagen.—In Berlin, Liszt's pupil, M. Alexander Siloti, played the 'Totentanz' with the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Professor Arthur Nikisch, at the second Philharmonic Concert.

The programme of the first Concert of the Hamburgische Musikfreunde (conductor, Professor Francesco P. Neglia), given on October 23, consisted of compositions by Liszt, including the 'Dante' symphony, the orchestral 'Nächtliche Zug,' the Pianoforte concerto in E flat, and the 'Totentanz' for pianoforte and orchestra.

ANTWERP.

At the last annual concert devoted to works by the Flemish composer Peter Benoit, the two sacred choral works 'Hoogmis' and the 'Drama Christi' proved very impressive.

BERLIN.

Herr Felix von Weingartner, who for many years was conductor of the Königliche Kapelle and resigned his position owing to differences with the chief of the Royal Theatres (Count von Hülsen-Haeseler), has sued the proprietor of the theatres, the German Emperor in his capacity of King of Prussia, for the repayment of a fine amounting to £450, and also appealed against a former judgment forbidding his public appearance in Berlin until the year 1916. His contention was that he had committed no breach of contract. The action, however, proved unsuccessful in both instances. Herr von Weingartner intends to appeal again.—The first concert of the series given by the Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Professor Arthur Nikisch, opened with a fine performance of Richard Wagner's 'Faust' overture. The rest of the programme was devoted to works by the late Gustav Mahler, including the second Symphony in C minor and the 'Kindertotenlieder' (very impressively sung by Madame Lula Myscz-Gmeiner).—Miss Katherine Goodson introduced Arthur Hinton's Pianoforte concerto at her first concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra.—On October 2, Granville Bantock's symphonic poem 'Dante and Beatrice' was performed for the first time in Berlin under the conductorship of Herr Arnold Schattschneider. The work was well received.

BOSTON, U.S.A.

The coming opera season promises to be of unusual interest. The list of artists includes the names of Mesdames Alten, Destin, Eames, Gadsby, Mary Garden, Nordica, Tétrazini, and Messrs. Clement, Slezak, Amato, Renaud, Scotti, &c. Herr von Weingartner will conduct some special performances. Many French works in particular will be heard, including Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' and 'L'enfant prodigue,' Massenet's 'Werther,' 'Thaïs' and 'Manon,' and a novelty, 'La Forêt bleue,' by M. Louis Aubert.

BRUSSELS.

Gounod's 'Faust' was recently given for the 800th time at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie.—M. Saint-Saëns has been in Brussels supervising the rehearsals of his new opera 'Dejanire,' which is to be produced presently at the same institution. The management took advantage of the composer's presence to arrange a special performance of 'Samson and Delilah.'

DRESDEN.

At their first concert the Bohemian String Quartet introduced Max Reger's latest work, a String quartet in F sharp minor, Op. 121, dedicated to the members of the Quartet. The composition contains a very fine Adagio, and created on the whole a very deep impression.

HAMBURG.

The most interesting feature of the present season has been the revival of Goldmark's 'Die Königin von Saba' at the municipal opera house. Another artistic treat of the highest order has been an excellent performance of Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen.' All four performances were given superbly under the direction of Herr Arthur Nikisch.

LUBECK.

The operatic season has commenced and promises to be of more than usual interest. The following works are to be given for the first time:—Richard Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier,' Humperdinck's 'Königskinder,' Puccini's 'La Tosca,' Tchaikovsky's 'Eugen Onegin,' Smetana's 'Die verkaufte Braut,' Eugen d'Albert's 'Flauto solo,' Mozart's 'Bastien and Bastienne,' and Pergolesi's 'La serva Padrona.'

LUGANO.

The orchestra at Château Trevano, conducted by M. Louis Lombard, have adopted the plan of giving a distinctive interest to each of their programmes. That provided at the first concert in October was devoted to American composers: G. Chadwick, Arthur Foote, Henry Hading, E. Stillman Kelly and Edward MacDowell were well represented.

NURNBERG.

The most interesting event of the season has so far been the performance of Berlioz's great 'Messe des morts,' given by the Lehrergesangverein in the St. Lorenzkirche.

PARIS.

At the first Lamoureux Concert, given on October 15, M. Camille Chevillard produced a very interesting new Symphony (the fourth) by M. Guy Ropartz. On the same occasion Liszt's symphonic poem 'Hungaria' was excellently played.—On October 9, Gounod's 'Faust' was given for the 1,400th time at the Grand Opéra.—The Colonne Concerts commenced this season's activities under the direction of M. Gabriel Pierné on October 15, when fine performances of Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique' and Beethoven's Ninth were given.—Molière's 'Le Bourgeois gentilhomme,' with the original incidental music by Lully, has aroused much interest on its revival at the Odéon Theatre on October 5.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The Imperial Opera commenced the season on September 12 with a fine performance of Glinka's national opera 'La vie pour le Czar.' Shortly afterwards Borodine's 'Prince Igor' was excellently given under the direction of Mr. Albert Coates, who has for some time been engaged as chief conductor at the Imperial Opera.

VIENNA.

The first novelty of the season at the Imperial Opera has been Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale' (in the new edition by Herr W. Kleefeld), which was given on September 14. Signor Caruso has appeared three times (in 'Pagliacci,' 'Rigoletto' and 'Carmen') with his customary success. On the first of these occasions the first performance in Vienna was also given of Schnitzler's 'Tanzpantomime,' 'Der Schleier der Pierrette,' with Herr von Dohnányi's music. The work was not so successful as it had been elsewhere.

Miscellaneous.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following candidates have been awarded scholarships: The Ada Lewis Scholarships: pianoforte—Philip Augustus Lèvi (London); singing—Nellie Rose Innes (London); violin—Solomon B. Chyte (London). The John Thomas Welsh Scholarship: singing—Mabel Eleanor James (Merthyr Tydfil). The Orchestral Instrument Scholarship: Evan Jones, flautist (Vynshir, Wales). The Maud Mary Gooch Scholarship: organ—William H. P. Hoare (Pietermaritzburg). The Henry Smart Scholarship: organ or composition—Alec Rowley (London). The Josephine Troup Scholarship: composition—Dorothy Capon (Epsom). The Stainer Exhibition: organ—John Albert Sowerbutts (London). The Ross Scholarship: singing—Powell Edwards (Rhos, Wales). The Ross Scholarship: wood-wind instruments—Tara Primula Hunt (Donegal). The Sainnton and Charles Oldham Scholarships for violinists of either sex, not over eighteen years of age, will be held in January.

Mr. Lister R. Peace, late organist of Queens' College, Cambridge, and eldest son of Dr. A. L. Peace, of Liverpool, has been appointed music-master of Sutton Valence School, Kent, an institution which was founded in 1576 by the Clothworkers' Company. In 1910 it was partly taken over by the Westminster Trust, and is now governed by a board of directors selected from both companies. New and palatial buildings, costing over £25,000, were opened by the Archbishop of Canterbury in July last. Mr. Peace is to be congratulated upon the attainment of a position of such importance and opportunity at the outset of his career.

The National Brass Band Festival held at the Crystal Palace on September 30 attracted 183 entries. The championship, in which the test was an arrangement by Mr. William Rimmer of music from 'Les Huguenots,' was won by Perfection Soap Works, Warrington, conducted by Mr. W. Halliwell. Other prizes were won by Lincoln Malleable, Hemsworth Colliery, Bridlington Excelsior, Birdwell and District, Birkenhead Borough, and 1st Welsh (Howitzer) Brigade. Massed bands played at the concluding concert under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Iles.

On the occasion of their marriage, Mr. R. G. Hailing, organist and choirmaster of St. Bernard's Parish Church, Edinburgh, and his wife (née Miss Mary Barclay, principal soprano in the church), were presented by the Kirk-session with a cheque for £21. The choir also made a presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Hailing.

Mr. Charles Brumm has arranged to give four chamber concerts at Southport, with Señor Pablo Casals (November 10), Mr. Lionel Tertis (December 4), Signor Siloti (March 5), and the Parisian String Quartet (March 28) as the principal executives.

The season at the 'Old Vic,' Waterloo Road, opened on October 5 with a costume-recital of Gounod's 'Faust,' under Mr. Charles Corri's direction. The audience consisted of a vast number of people, many of whom had paid twopence for admission.

The illustrations given in our October issue in connection with the article on the Stratford-upon-Avon Summer School of Folk-song, were by kind permission, taken from photographs by E. Anthony Tyler, of Stratford-upon-Avon.

At the Town Hall, Stratford, on October 12, Mr. Leon Foulton gave his second annual concert with the assistance of Miss Alice Motterway and other artists. Mr. Wilfrid Sharp gave a short organ recital.

We much regret to hear that the East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society, which Mr. George R. Ceiley has conducted with great ability since 1902, has been dissolved.

The Lichfield Musical Society, conducted by Mr. J. B. Lott, have decided to perform Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's new cantata 'A tale of old Japan' during the coming season.

Mr. Clifton Cooke has been appointed a professor of solo singing at the Upper Tooting College of Music, recently opened by Mr. Allan Brown.

Answers to Correspondents.

A. C. M. ELLIS.—So far as we are aware, there are no means of disposing of lyrics suitable for musical setting other than by sending copies to composers to whom they are likely to appeal, or to publishers of vocal music. These are forlorn hopes for the unknown. Sometimes a market is found by getting literary periodicals to print verses gratuitously, the copyright for musical setting being retained.

J. W. FELL.—You do not mention your sex, but we assume that you are a youth. At nineteen years of age your voice is in a dubious condition. If you sing at all, it should be gently and without effort, as you must allow the tendencies within you to develop naturally. No one can foretell which way your voice will grow.

R. D. GURNEY.—All particulars regarding entrance to Choir schools for boys will be found in the 'Directory of Musical Education,' by the Rev. C. E. Butler (Novello's, price one shilling).

(Other Answers are held over, or have been dealt with privately.)

A LIBRARY OF MUSIC INSTRUCTION.

First Payment only 1s. 6d.

Few Teachers or Students of Music could fail to derive great benefit from the wonderful publication that is being published by the Caxton Publishing Company—"The Musical Educator." Its aim is to supply in compact and interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG,
"The Piano and how to Play it."
EDWIN H. LEMARE,
"The Art of Organ Playing."
MADAME MARCHESI,
"The Teaching of Singing."
JOHN DUNN,
"On Playing the Violin."
SIR F. H. COWEN,
"The Art of Conducting."

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeggio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms. Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

Its Value to the Teacher.

In "The Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work or reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that "The Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"'The Musical Educator' is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent." Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader. . . . It contains excellent instructions."

ANTHEMS ANCIENT AND MODERN

THE BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE SAYS:

"Should prove a boon and a blessing to the Church throughout the world. Surely there never was such a book in such a compass. There can be no doubt as to the brilliant future awaiting this most surprising book."

THE CHURCH TIMES SAYS:

"Great care has been taken in selecting from among the works of well-known composers those which have stood the test of frequent use and are of recognized standard excellence, while the new compositions are of such merit as to warrant the belief that they will win a wide acceptance. We wish for this admirable collection the cordial reception it deserves."

THE MUSICAL JOURNAL

Regards it as epoch-making in the matter of providing congregations with good anthems at the lowest possible cost. Think of it—a hundred and thirty-four anthems for three shillings. The collection deserves a hearty welcome.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE SAYS:

"An excellent collection, convenient in form, clear in setting both of music and letterpress, contributed to by composers of justly merited fame. We are assured it will meet a real need, and consequently receive a hearty welcome alike from clergy, choirmasters, choirs and congregations."

Cloth boards, 3s.; Cloth boards, gold lettered, red edges, 3s. 6d.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 6s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

THE MOUNT,

VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT,

February, 1911.

GENTLEMEN,

I feel I must write and congratulate you on your new model 15 Visible YÖST. For many years I have used a typewriter for my private and business correspondence, as I can write three or four letters in the same length of time that it would take me to write one by hand. Although I have had, I think, every high-class typewriter in the market, yet I have never been satisfied with the appearance of my letters owing to the invariable blurring effect of the ribbon. For business purposes the ribbon machines may be satisfactory; but for beautiful, clean-cut work (equal to printer's ink) I unhesitatingly state that the ribbonless Yöst is the only machine for very special correspondence and private use—that is if the writer takes any pride in the appearance of his letters.

Again, the touch is so light and even, that it is a pleasure for a musician to use—being no strain on the fingers whatever—and this is a double advantage to such as myself. The automatic double-blow which is given to the type bars (without extra exertion on the part of the writer) is one of the most cleverly thought out pieces of mechanism I have ever seen; and being a student of mechanics I fully appreciate the scientific and perfectly simple design of the whole apparatus—which has evidently been built to last and to give uniform and high-class service.

You are at liberty, if you choose, to make use of this letter in any way that may be to your advantage.

I am, Yours faithfully,

(Signed) EDWIN H. LEMARE.

The above unsolicited testimonial has been received from Mr. Lemare and is now published by his kind permission for the first time. This striking testimonial requires no further comment as to the merits of the Yöst Typewriter.

THE UNISON CHANT CHOIR-BOOK.

A Collection of Original Chants Designed to Encourage Congregational Singing

BY

ARTHUR W. POLLITT AND E. BRYSON.

2s. 6d. net.

Extract from a letter from an Australian Vicar and Cathedral Precentor (M.A., Mus. Bac. Oxon.), August 16, 1910:—

"Some months ago a traveller brought out a few samples of your Unison Chant Choir-Book, which so struck me that I almost at once adopted this plan in my church for singing the Psalms. I had long been on the lookout for such a book, because I have felt that the usual 4-part harmony tunes are a bad medium for the expression of congregational worship. I am delighted with the result . . . the Psalms never go badly, however poor the choir, and I find that at my Wednesday evening service, when there is no choir at all, it is quite possible to sing a Psalm and the Canticles to some of your tunes. . . . The effect is (to my mind) very fine indeed. It gives an impression of bigness and breadth, which is altogether wanting in average Anglican chant singing."

Musical Times:—"To those who feel that the highest form of worship is obtained by congregational singing, the work before us will no doubt make a strong appeal. The vocal part of the chants is of low pitch, and generally of small compass and diatonic progression, and consequently easily grasped by the congregation. . . . The book is evidently the result of conscientious thought and high ideal."

Musical Standard:—"A book of uncommon interest to organists. . . . And I think it is destined to attract a good deal of attention, firstly, because it is essentially useful; and, secondly, because it is an innovation."

Record:—"These chants may be recommended to churches which cannot command the services of a four-part choir. Most of the chants are broad, diatonic melodies, well written, attractive, and of suitable compass."

Yorkshire Post:—"The chants are simple and broad, well suited for their purpose . . . The idea underlying is a thoroughly sound one, for it points to the way in which congregational singing of the Psalms may become a practical and artistic reality, instead of being a most unsatisfactory subterfuge."

Aberdeen Free Press:—"The book is on admirable lines, although the reformation which it is designed to follow may be slow in coming."

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press, Amen Corner, E.C.

THE VEIL

FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

VOCAL SCORE, PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt, 5s.; Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each; String Parts, 12s. 6d.; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

It was quite clear that the work made a deep impression upon the audience; for the applause during its course and at the end was evidently the result of real appreciation, and not merely what was due to the popular conductor of the festival. The appreciation was well deserved; there are points of genuine beauty in every number, and the earnestness of the whole conception and the skill with which it has been carried out place the composer in a stronger light than anything which he has yet written.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It is a genuine pleasure to record that the very large audience was filled with an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. Recall of the composer followed recall in the charming concert-room. Dr. Cowen has risen to heights at least as lofty as those reached by the poet whose muse attracted him. . . . I would go further, and say that he has risen higher. . . . Dr. Cowen, true to himself, has surpassed himself, and many are the lovely passages in his most recent production.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's festival novelty, "The Veil," which was heard for the first time, is the most ambitious and notable composition the composer has made to the literature of music. . . . Early in the first part we catch a glimpse of his felicity of expression in the tenor solo, "Now an Evangel," which in its sense of "compassion makes an immediate appeal. . . . "Earth the mother," with its somewhat Elgarque influence and feeling, is one of the most eloquent sections. . . . The second part, "The Dream of the World without Death," is ushered in by some pregnant orchestral strains, and it is this section that went a long way to-night to establish the success of the work. The contralto solo, with its note of tender solicitude, mingled with passionate questionings, comes nearer to genuine inspiration than any other portion intensely seeking to penetrate the mysteries of the unknown was excellently conveyed, and a still better effect was obtained in those sections where intense and tragical expression was called for. Altogether it was clear that in this music the composer has made a notable addition to choral literature, and has shown himself ready to adopt the British style of abstract expression.

MORNING LEADER.

Its sincerity was clear, and its success was undeniable. . . . It proved to be essentially modern in conception, and its qualities in this respect were heightened by the absence of any traces of foreign, as distinct from British influence. It belongs to the same school as the "Dream of Gerontius," and it can claim a high place among the recent output of choral work of a distinctively national type. The interest of the work occasionally rose to great heights. . . . The general idea of mankind intensely seeking to penetrate the mysteries of the unknown was excellently conveyed, and a still better effect was obtained in those sections where intense and tragical expression was called for. Altogether it was clear that in this music the composer has made a notable addition to choral literature, and has shown himself ready to adopt the British style of abstract expression.

DAILY NEWS.

There are several happy imaginative touches. . . . Among these the most noticeable was the contralto's song, in which a mother bewails the loss of her children, which is a beautiful and impressive composition. Again, Dr. Cowen has been inspired in the song of the Watcher at the deathbed. It is for baritone, and has real poignancy and beauty. One could continue to point out this and that beauty in the work, but the mere mention of solos will convey nothing to the reader who has not heard and does not know "The Veil." It must be enough to say that Dr. Cowen has written a work which contains many surprising beauties, and that, if it falls short of being a masterpiece, it is certainly a most interesting contribution to native art.

MORNING POST.

The success with which he presents his thoughts is a tribute to his intellectual powers, and helps to make the work a remarkable production. . . . There is a highly successful effort in the creation of atmosphere at the commencement of the "Dream of the World without Death," with the scene of the Watcher, and the orchestral colouring is excellent. . . . The sequential description by the Mother of the loss of her two children possesses great pathos, and the chorus that concludes this section has a breadth and an originality that might well have been maintained. . . . The duet [between the Soul and the Body] has a lyrical character that fully represents Dr. Cowen's powers of writing graceful and pleasing music. . . . The best effect is secured at its close, in which the Chorus have a share, and here the construction and colouring are masterly in their grace and tenderness. The Song of the Seeker does not in itself indicate that the special manner has been maintained, and the impression made was by means of the choral climax, and with so much conviction that the audience burst into spontaneous applause when it reached a point of apparent termination. . . . The Vision of the Divine Presence is described in hushed, spoken sentences, and the work comes to a calm end with the awakening of the Seeker and the close of the vision.

WORKSHIRE POST.

"The Veil" strikes one first of all as a remarkably able and thoughtful treatment of a noble and inspiring theme, and it shows not merely the power to provide fitting music for the text, but a sense of proportion and of the value of contrast that is of the greatest possible service in enhancing and holding the hearer's attention. The weird chromatic progressions by which it is sought to express the mystical atmosphere of a great portion of the poem are relieved by the tender mood of the section entitled "Earth the mother," and again by the simple and appealing pathos of the episode in which the mother is bereft of her children. This had the advantage of being sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, whose consummate art has never been more strikingly displayed, for she obtained an effect of the deepest emotion without the least suspicion of exaggeration, but with a reticence which enhanced the sincerity of the performance not easily forgotten by those who heard it. But only her rightful share must be allowed the executant for a result which she could not have produced had not the same sincerity been discoverable in the music, which, to my mind, places Dr. Cowen on a still higher plane than he has ever occupied hitherto. Another very beautiful scene is the duet for soprano and tenor, a love scene of an exalted type, breathing an emotion which is not merely sensuous, yet has a note of passion mingled with its strains. A happy idea is where the lifting of the Veil is told by the contraltos and basses with the spoken voice, the effect of which at the central point of a great musical work is most striking.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

His music is essentially vivid. Much use is made of leading themes, and that which is associated with the idea of the Veil is especially striking. . . . The most cumulative effect occurs towards the end of the work. It is very massive and imposing. . . . The work was greeted with well-judged enthusiasm, and Dr. Cowen was called upon several times to acknowledge the applause.

SUNDAY TIMES.

"The Veil" is avowedly Dr. Cowen's magnum opus. He has in this last work addressed himself to a subject of the deepest import and the most exacting demand, and has done so with a loftiness of purpose, a high courage, and a sincerity of expression that have set their seal upon the work and made it one of the most notable achievements of contemporary art.

REFERECE.

The music is a revelation of a new and unsuspected phase of the composer's genius. . . . The big choral number of the work, in which the composer shows conspicuously his resource and craftsmanship, is worked up to a stupendous climax, the biggest page of music Dr. Cowen has ever written.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—OCTOBER 10 to 14.

As we have before remarked, the competition movement and most of its best results can be comprehensively and minutely studied at this extraordinarily successful event; it is here in fact under intensive culture. Incidentally the continued success and expansion of the Festival is a tribute to the tact, skill and high purpose of the promoters; for if it were otherwise the acute supporters of the competitions would have soon discovered weaknesses, and would simply have stayed away.

The handsomely-printed programme book of ninety-one pages, nowhere disfigured by advertisements, gives a full list of the entries in 57 classes. It is an interesting and educational volume, in the first place because it is informing as to the composers of the 67 pieces chosen as tests, and next because its lists of names and places represented bear witness to the extent of the area interested in the event.

On the first day there were numerous miscellaneous classes, chiefly instrumental; and in the evening some children's choirs sang very delightfully. Four church choirs also competed.

On the second and third days the adult solo singing classes, which are such a remarkable feature of this Festival, were heard under several judges working separately. These classes were in eight sections, two for each kind of voice. There were over 400 competitors. And what was the value of the first prize in each section? £1 11s. 6d.! Scores of the competitors must have spent as much in order to compete. The eight winners then re-competed for the Rose-bowl offered by Mr. J. Crook, of Lytham. It was an absorbing event, and vastly interested the huge audience. The result was that the bowl was awarded to Mr. R. R. Clarke, of Blackley, for his highly moving and temperamental interpretation of Loewe's dramatic ballad 'Edward.' Mr. Clarke is, we believe, a carpenter. A new feature was the institution of a class for singers who performed the foreign songs in their original language.

The children's day was, as usual, a delightful experience. Some of the two-part sight-singing, especially that by Mr. Barlow's Devonshire Road School children, was surprisingly fluent. An excellent performance of Mr. Percy E. Fletcher's new and very musically children's cantata 'The walrus and the carpenter' was given, under the direction of the composer. Action-songs were done as they are scarcely ever done anywhere else.

Last year Mr. Charles Manners suggested that a selection from an opera, to be performed on a stage in costume, should form the subject of a new class. The idea was accepted, and the Garden scene from Gounod's 'Faust' was selected. Four parties entered, but only three sang. Critical listeners were prepared for calamity; but, to the surprise and pleasure of all, the performances were remarkably good. That of Mr. Robinson's Burnley Quartet was excellent in every way. Marguerite was specially successful. It was astonishing to hear afterwards that she and Martha were weavers in daily employment, and that they had never seen a performance of the opera

On the last day the open competitions for orchestral bands and choirs of various grades and constitutions took place. We can only now briefly remark on some of the most striking performances. The two classes that excite the greatest interest, because they bring forth many of the most highly-trained choirs in the country, are the Challenge Shield Mixed-Voice Class and the Challenge Trophy Male-Voice Class. The tests in both classes were about as severe as they could be. The results are shown below. In the mixed-voice class, the victory—by one mark—of the Halifax Madrigal Society (Mr. Shepley) led to a jubilant scene. Their performance of all the tests was fascinating as to tone, rhythm, and fine expression. It is evident that Lancashire will have to be wary if Yorkshire determines to send such splendid choirs as that from Halifax. Mrs. Bourne's famous Barrow Choir—the previous year's winners—also exhibited rare insight and perfection of choral technique, and came, as will be seen, very close; but Stourbridge came even closer. In the male-voice class the Midlands again came to the front. Mr. Harry Woodall's Stourbridge Choir (winners last year) particularly excelled in Bantock's 'Lucifer in Starlight,' a novel piece that looks impossible, but is effective enough when done as it was on this occasion. Many thoughts are suggested by the experience of this remarkable week. We shall hope to be able to give them utterance in a future issue.

The adjudicators were: Dr. W. G. McNaught, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Mr. Frederic Austin, Madame Edith Handis, Mr. Ernest Newman, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Mr. J. Francis Harford, Mr. C. Risegari, Mr. John Nichols, and Mr. C. H. Fogg.

Mr. Ernest Newman thus writes on the Blackpool Festival in the Birmingham Post:

Saturday, of course, is the culminating day when all the big events, the chief competitions for male-voice and mixed-voice choirs and for orchestras are decided. As I was adjudicating all day, I got some interesting impressions of the Festival from the inside. One thing that struck me was the inconvenience of having too many adjudicators sitting in the same class. Yesterday, in the morning competition for female-voice choirs, there were four of us—Dr. McNaught, Mr. Frederic Austin, Dr. Brewer, of Gloucester, and myself. As each adjudicator's opinions have to be heard and weighed before they all agree upon their marking, there are necessarily considerable intervals between the performances. The result yesterday was that we were over an hour behind on the schedule time for the morning's work. Two adjudicators are surely enough for the most important classes, as there is seldom sufficient difference of view between the judges to necessitate the intervention of a third opinion, and if compromise should be necessary it can be arrived at much more quickly by two people than by three or four. The time is lost in the mere expressing and hearing of practically identical views by three or four people. If the choirs are afraid that with two adjudicators there would not be enough variety of outlook, they may be assured that it never happens, or, at least, it has never happened within my experience, that a given performance strikes four adjudicators in four different ways. If they do not all agree at once upon it, at any rate two or three of them come to the same conclusions about it at once. The saving of time is of the utmost importance in these festivals, and where it is lost is in seemingly trifling delays. An extra couple of minutes taken by the adjudicators in talking things over seems nothing in itself, but when it happens after each of about fifty performances something like two hours is frittered away.

Another point that struck me yesterday was the necessity of giving the conductors of the choirs an assurance that they may safely, so far as the judges are concerned, exercise their own intelligence upon the markings of the music. From conversations I have had with some of them I gather that they are afraid of being penalised if they fail to keep strictly to the printed dynamic marks, while other choirs observe them. The inevitable result is a tendency to mechanical singing. If there is a sudden change, for example, from fast to slow, from forte to piano, and so on, the choir is anxious to let the judges see that the point has not escaped it. Instead of letting the marks of expression steal subtly upon us some choirs felt us with them. Even the very best choirs are not free from this failing. This excessively deferential regard for the markings becomes quite absurd in the case of old music. In the madrigal, for example, of the Elizabethan Wilbye that was sung yesterday, not one mark in the score comes from the composer. They are all the work of a modern editor. I would even disregard, if need be, the markings of a living composer. His tempo indications, for example, are simply a record of the pace at which he himself, if he were conducting, would try to get the effect he needs. But vital expression is not a mere matter of pace, but of pace and mood combined. A slower tempo will seem faster in an emotionally animated rendering than a faster tempo in an emotionally sluggish rendering. A pianissimo again, is not a term of fixed and invariable meaning. Intensity of delivery has to be taken into account as well as body of tone. A pianissimo vibrating with feeling may come to us with more force than a colourless mezzo-forte. The choirs should, therefore, be encouraged to deal freely with music—within, of course, rational limits. It is bound to make for mechanism if they persist at every rehearsal and every performance in getting precisely the same nuances. No great soloist ever plays or sings the same work twice in precisely the same way. If Kreisler were to aim at standardizing every point of expression in his reading of the Elgar Concerto, for instance, he would soon cease to be Kreisler. Let choirs be assured that the adjudicators will not call anything they do bad, so long as it makes the music sound better, more like a natural, living organism, and they will, I should think, be glad to feel that they can think more independently about it.

BRISTOL.

Great interest was taken in the Autumnal Festival of the National Temperance Choral Union held this year in Bristol. The chief attraction was presented on September 23 at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, where vocal competitions took place, the candidates, besides those from Bristol, coming from several towns in the West of England and South Wales. The adjudicators were, for solos, Mr. John S. Perry (Exeter Cathedral), and for choral contests, Mr. G. Beale (Llandaff Cathedral). For the soprano soloists the test-piece was 'Let there be light' (Hemery), and the winner was Miss Annie Alder (Cardiff). The test-piece for contraltos was 'The Seville gipsy maid' (Lardelli), the winner Miss Edith Jones (Cardiff). In the tenors Mr. T. Lloyd (Cardiff) carried off the first award, the test-piece being 'My queen' (Blumenthal). Mr. G. G. Fitzgerald (Cardiff) was placed first among the basses, 'The watchman' (Squire) being the test-piece. In junior choirs, 'The Band of Hope Choir' (Plymouth) won the first prize, the conductor Mr. W. T. Sayer, and the test-pieces 'The echoing green' (Stanford) and 'The Viking song' (Coleridge-Taylor).

The Bristol Temperance Choral Society, of which Mr. F. Stone is conductor, won the first award among elder choirs, 'The song of the sword' (Cuthbert Nunn) and 'Shepherd's song' (Maunder) being the test-pieces. In the principal choral competition, for the challenge vase, the test-pieces were 'Drake's drum' (E. Rendall) and 'To music' (C. Lee Williams). Reading Temperance Choral Society, Mr. A. W. Moss, conductor, won the vase.

There was a concert at night in Colston Hall, and all the vocalists who had taken part in the competition were associated. Mr. F. Stone conducted. Solos were given by Miss Winifred Thomas and Mr. J. S. Perry, the accompanist at the pianoforte being Mr. W. E. Fowler, and Mr. George Riseley contributed organ pieces. At one stage the Lord Mayor of Bristol distributed the prizes.

CO-OPERATIVE CHORAL ASSOCIATION (MIDLAND SECTION).

This Section held its fifth annual Junior Festival at Langley Mill on September 23. Six choirs entered in the chief contest, the tests for which were Fletcher's 'The enchanted spring,' Bantock's 'Elftown,' and an own-choice piece. The result was as follows:

- 2nd. Derby (Mr. T. H. Bennett).
Lincoln (Mr. D. Hirst).
Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley).
Langley Mill (Mr. S. Marson).
Ilkeston (Mr. H. Fletcher).
- 1st. Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts).

In the solo-singing competitions prizes were won by Herbert Allen, Hilda Beers, and Edith Street. Mr. T. Maskell Hardy was the adjudicator.

BLACKBURN.—September 23.

The ninth annual Co-operative Choir contests were held at the Town Hall, with Mr. Dan Price as adjudicator.

Twelve mixed choirs sang the test-pieces, 'Early one morning' (arr. Dunhill) and 'The sands of Dee' (Foster). Huddersfield, Bingley, Accrington, and Failsworth gained the first four places in order with some highly expressive and efficient singing.

The male-voice tests were Schumann's 'The lotos flower' and Brahms's 'United are we.' Out of six competitors Accrington Church was first.

MANCHESTER.—October 7.

In spite of the lateness of the season the gardens at Belle Vue were crowded on this occasion, when the tenth annual choral contest was held.

So numerous were the entries in the Mixed-Voice Church or Chapel Choir Class (sixteen in all) that a preliminary contest had to be held, the following four being selected to sing in the final, the test-piece being Stainer's anthem, 'Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion' (accompanied).

- 1st. United Methodist, Stalybridge (Mr. H. Thorp).
- 2nd. Wesley Chapel, Sale (Mr. A. Higson).
- 3rd. United Methodist, Rochdale (Mr. F. A. Midgeley).
Altrincham Primitive Methodist (Mr. J. A. Hill).

In contrast to the above class there was a falling off in the number of entries for choral societies as compared with last year, a fact due doubtless in some measure to the very great difficulty of the principal test, Hubert Bath's six-part song, 'Spring-wind.' However, the following six choirs essayed the piece, along with Brahms's 'Farewell':

- Manchester Clarion Vocal Union (Mr. T. Corlett).
- 2nd. Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Wilkinson).
- 1st. Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. W. Lloyd Ashton).
- 3rd. Mossley Vocal Society (Mr. J. Shaw).
Stockport Madrigal Society (Mr. T. H. Dresser).
Ashton Choral Society (Mr. R. W. Walker).

The Thornton Choir was the only one which really caught the gay abandon of William Sharp's 'Full-voiced herald of immaculate spring,' and thus wrested the Fifty Guinea Challenge Trophy from Mossley, who won it last year, when Bradford also was placed third.

The 127 competitors who entered for the four solo voice classes were again wisely restricted in their choice of songs, to five or six standard pieces for each voice.

Thus Miss Gwennie Ellis (Stockport) carried off first prize in the soprano class with Gounod's 'Far greater in His lowly state,' Miss Lillian Smith (Manchester) secured premier honours amongst the contraltos with Barnby's 'When the tide comes in,' Mr. J. W. Lingard (Hebden Bridge) topped the tenor list with Verdi's 'Celeste Aida,' and Mr. J. Pearson (Bingley) attained pride of place amongst the basses with Leoncavallo's prologue to 'Pagliacci.'

The judges on this occasion were Mr. R. H. Wilson, Mr. C. H. Fogg, Dr. Keighley, and Mr. John James, conductor of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society.

STOCKSBRIDGE.—October 7.

The Festival was again highly successful in every feature. Mr. Harry Evans, who adjudicated, expressed great satisfaction with the artistic results. A very high standard was reached by the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society, who, with 143 out of 160, won the first prize in the male-voice section. The tests were 'O peaceful night' (German), and 'Hymn before action' (Walford Davies). Stocksbridge Congregational was second. In the class for church and chapel choirs the tests were 'Who is Sylvia?' (German), and 'Send out Thy light' (Gounod). The best three choirs, in order, were the Wesleyan, Congregational and Primitive Methodist choirs of Stocksbridge. Prizes for solo singing were won by Miss Annie A. Tunnicliffe (soprano), Miss Nora Johnson (contralto), Mr. Harry Scaife (tenor), and Mr. L. Calvert (bass). Miss Hilda Slater was the most successful of the juvenile pianists.

LLANDUDNO.—October 14.

This annual Festival, held for the second time, again attracted six male-voice choirs and only one mixed-voice choir. The test-pieces for the former were 'War song' (Llantock) and 'Gosteg Fôr' (D. Jenkins). The competitors were:

- 3rd. Tunstall Glee Union (Mr. W. A. Lonsdale).
- Chapel Gresley P.M. (Mr. George Walton).
- 1st. Llanrwst (Mr. W. E. Davies).
- 2nd. Todmorden (Mr. S. Beaumont).
- Denton (Mr. James Hardy).
- Colne Orpheus (Mr. L. Greenwood).

The mixed-voice test-piece was Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave.' Menai Bridge Choral Society (Mr. G. W. Senogles) was the only entry. The following school choirs sang C. H. Lloyd's 'Twelve by the clock':

- 1st. Dyffryn Road C.S. (Mr. Hughie Hughes).
- 2nd. Conway Girls' School (Miss M. Jones).
Llanfairfechan Boys' National School (Mr. W. Timmins).

In a further competition for children's choirs, Carnarvon Young Choristers (Mr. R. Roberts), beat Bangor Juvenile Choir (Mr. G. T. Jones); the test was 'Dôs, Wanwyn, Dôs' (Go, springtime, go), by David de Lloyd.

Solo prizes were won by Miss Winifred Eastwood (pianoforte), Miss Gladys Jones (violin), Miss Gladys Harwood (contralto), and Mr. Roland Booth (tenor, 16 entries).

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor and Mr. Harry Evans adjudicated.

GREAT COMPETITION IN PARIS

WHITSUNTIDE (1912).—May 25 to 27.

There is every prospect that the International Music Festival which is to be held in Paris next Whitsun will be one of the greatest musical gatherings on record. The scheme of organization is on a vast scale, and the arrangements that are being made for the comfort of visiting choirs and orchestras do honour to the Paris City Council, and add to the well-known reputation of the French people for courtesy and generosity.

Although no statement has been made by the officials connected with the Festival, it appears that this Musical Festival is intended to take the place of another Paris Universal Exhibition. Since 1856 every eleven years (1867, 1878, 1889, and 1900) an international exhibition has been held in Paris, on the banks of the Seine.

A few weeks ago, M. Chavanon, the General Secretary of the Festival, paid a visit to the British Agent-General of the Paris Committee, M. H. Bonnaire, in London. During his stay, M. Chavanon visited Mr. Wylie, the Traffic Manager of the L. B. & S. C. Railway, with reference to conveying choirs and orchestras across the Channel. Mr. Wylie was informed that between 20,000 and 30,000 might be expected to make the journey.

Mr. Wylie said that together the three companies which arrange for the cross-channel traffic had only enough boats to take over 10,000 people in three days.

M. Chavanon then inquired as to the anchorage at Newhaven, and having ascertained that it could accommodate three or four warships or transports, said that, subject to the approval of the British Government, he would endeavour to get the French Government to send ships for the choirs and bands. They had already anticipated some such difficulty, and had been in communication with their (the French) Government. Perhaps the British Government, as an act of courtesy, will send ships to bring the visitors back.

There is no doubt that ships additional to those of the railway companies will be required. A fair number of choral societies and bands have already decided to go from England and Wales. The choirs are most prominent, however, and when it is stated that some of them are 300 to 400 strong, it will be seen that the task before the Paris City Council is a formidable one. But from past experience

Paris should be equal to it, and the preparations give promise that everything will go without a hitch. At present about 1,000 societies from all over the world have given notice of their intention to compete, and 550 have definitely entered.

It will at once be obvious that such a great number of choirs and orchestras cannot all meet in one place. To meet the necessities of the case, one hundred and fifty halls situated in various parts of Paris have been hired for May 25, 26, and 27. These halls probably include the twenty-one town-halls of Paris.

The jury, which will be international, will number five hundred, including the most prominent musicians, composers, and adjudicators of the world.

A communique from the Paris City Council states that one hundred and fifty pieces have been composed specially, and the choral works have all to be translated many times, for each choir will sing in its own language; whereby the task of the adjudicators will not be an easy one.

The Council have to provide a guide for each Society, band, and orchestra—a responsible task in itself—who will see to their comfort, and accompany them about Paris during their stay.

The Agent-General for Great Britain, M. Bonnaire, has been inundated with letters asking every conceivable question. Many Societies have asked whether the Paris City Council will make grants towards expenses. This, however, cannot be done, owing to the many hundreds of societies and thousands of persons to be dealt with. It is assumed that if a choir or band is desirous of competing, there will not be wanting generous compatriots to assist them. It must be pointed out that the Paris City Council has already bound itself to convey and cater for the hundreds of thousands of musicians and their friends at rates which are absurdly low—constituting about a quarter of the cost of an ordinary cheap week-end visit to Paris.

Inquiries are also constantly arriving as to the rules of the contest. These are now in the press and will shortly be ready. It should be borne in mind that very great care has been necessary in compiling the book of rules and conditions, and the difficulties of translation have not been slight.

All large instruments such as pianofortes, double-bass violis, big drums, &c., will be provided by the Council.

An interesting story is told by M. Chavanon of a visit he paid to Switzerland, where he interviewed a great many musical people. One bandmaster asked him what other nations were competing, and on M. Chavanon mentioning England, he remarked, 'Oh, but they don't count.' This must not be taken as an exceptional opinion, for it must be remembered that few Continental cities know the capabilities of English bands and choirs.

M. Chavanon, who was at the Crystal Palace Band Contest on September 30, expressed it as his opinion that English musicians would count for very much; and M. Bonnaire, who has an experience of music in both countries which extends over twenty-four years, states that if the British competitors do not secure the majority of the prizes he will be surprised, for there is nothing, in his opinion, anywhere on the Continent to compare with the beauty of English and Welsh mixed-voice choirs.

Paris musical organizations will not be allowed to compete. They are looked upon as hosts, and it is felt that it would not be acceptable to outsiders if Parisians won prizes.

There will be first, second, and third cash prizes for about each eight to ten societies competing, and in some instances other prizes besides. Any strength or combination of choirs and orchestras may compete, and will find a class to compete in. Sight-tests will be optional, with separate prizes. Copies of test-pieces used at former competitions in France, can be obtained on loan for a few days from M. Bonnaire, 20, High Holborn, London, W.C.

Many other general particulars of the competition were announced in the October issue of THE RECORD. We commented then upon the unlikelihood of English choirs caring to compete on Sunday. We understand that in order to meet this difficulty the fixtures for English choirs will be on Whit-Monday.

At the NORTH NOTTS (RET福德) competition, to be held April 20, 22, 23, and 24, 1912, there will be the following Morris and sword dance classes:—Tests from 'Morris books and Morris dance tunes,' by C. J. Sharp and H. C. Macilwaine (Novello & Co., Ltd.). Class A (boys under 16 years of age)—1. 'Constant Billy' ('Morris dance tunes,' Set I., 2s.); 2. Any Morris dance at each side's own selection. Class B (girls under 16 years of age)—1. 'Brighton Camp' ('Morris dance tunes,' Set VI., 2s.); 2. Any Morris dance at each side's own selection. Class C (open to all, no age limit)—Solo jig, 'Lumps of plum pudding' ('Morris dance tunes,' Set VI., 2s.). Class D, sword dance competition (open to men and boys)—'The Sword dances of Northern England' by C. J. Sharp (Novello & Co., 2s. 6d.), 'Kirkby Malzeard sword dance.' The music may be played on any instrument or instruments. Fancy dress and bells optional. Marks will be awarded for the dancing only. Class E—Children's singing games (for infants and children in Standards I. and II.)—Children's singing games' by Alice B. Gomme and C. J. Sharp. Set I. (Novello & Co., Ltd., 9d.), 'London Bridge' and 'Walking up the hillside.'

ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD, WREXHAM.

September 2 to 7, 1912.

In our October issue we stated that a notice in the syllabus of this great national event barred our giving particulars. We are glad now to be able to say that this unprecedented obstacle to a free advertisement of an undertaking that should be made known far and wide has been removed. We give below particulars regarding the tests in the chief choral classes. The selections generally show courage and judgment, and whatever the outcome may be the high aims of the Committee deserve recognition. 'Go, song of mine' (Elgar) will be a hard nut for the choirs to crack. Not only is it very difficult tonally, but it demands especial sympathy in interpretation. It is time that Welsh choirs realised their duty to themselves and their art by conquering modern musical idioms. Nothing but good will come from the attempt, even though all the choirs do not succeed at first. 'On Himalay' (Bantock), also one of the most beautiful of the composer's part-songs, presents certain problems of execution and interpretation. The following is a complete list of the test-pieces in the principal choral classes:

CHIEF CHORAL (150 to 180 Voices).

- Tests: (a) 'Cum Sancto Spiritu,' 2nd Mass, D Minor (Cherubini).
(To be sung in Latin).
(b) 'Llais y Gwanwyn' ('The voice of Spring'), unaccompanied (J. H. Roberts).
(c) 'Go, song of mine,' unaccompanied (Elgar).
Prizes, £150 and £50.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (60 to 80 Voices).

- Tests: (a) 'Deep Jordan's banks (Cyril Jenkins).
(b) 'Y gariad gollwyd' ('The lost love') unaccompanied (David Thomas).
(c) 'The glories of our blood and state' unaccompanied (Granville Bantock).
Prizes, £50 and £10.

SECOND CHORAL (60 to 80 Voices).

- Tests: (a) 'Death, I do not fear thee' ('Jesu, priceless treasure') (Bach).
(b) 'Ti, fy nghariad, wyt fel rhyosyn' ('My love is like a red, red rose'), unaccompanied (Emlyn Evans).
(c) 'On Himalay,' unaccompanied (Granville Bantock).
Prizes, £50 and £10.

LADIES' CHOIRS (35 to 45 Voices).

- Tests: (a) 'Newid cywair' ('A change of key') (Bryceson Trehearne).
 (b) 'The river king' (Schumann).
 (c) 'Encinctured with a twine of leaves' (Coleridge-Taylor).

Prizes, £25 and £5.

All the foregoing are open to all-comers.

Adjudicators: Mr. Granville Bantock, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Mr. Harry Evans, Mr. J. Owen-Jones, Mr. Dan Price, Mr. Caradog Roberts, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, and Dr. David Thomas.

At the Eisteddfod concerts, Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' Brahms's 'Requiem,' and Dr. David Thomas's 'Llyn y Fan,' will be performed by the Eisteddfod Choir, numbering 350 voices. Conductor, Mr. Wilfrid Jones.

MUSICAL COMPETITIONS.

The Morning Post musical critic is an able and consistent supporter of the competition movement. In a long article in a recent issue, the writer, after describing some of the features of these events, goes on to say:

This is the superficial aspect of one of the most remarkable musical undertakings of the day. The competitive meeting is not really of to-day. For the true origin we must go back to the days of the Bards, who might be supposed to have competed among themselves on the doorstep of some Earl for his patronage. Possibly there was some preliminary contest among the Druids who provided the musical accompaniment to the little matters on sunny Stonehenge or other of the mistletoe gatherings. In Wales we know that the Bardic contest is continued to this day in the Eisteddfodau, where temperament and a tendency to rise in pitch hold sway. It is possible that the idea may have been borrowed from Wales, but the simple fact is that the English, Scottish, and Irish musical competitions to-day have nothing in common with them. It is in the early seventies that we find record of musical competitions in England; that is, of course, vocal competitions. Brass band competitions have been held from time immemorial, ever since the noted makers began to put brass instruments within the reach of the collier, metal-worker and mill-hand.

But the vocal competition we find in being at no less a place than the Crystal Palace. In the National Music Meetings—note the title—held there in 1872, we have the beginnings of all things with respect to the musical competition of to-day in England. A championship—of what is not clear—was contested, and the Welsh Choir seems to have carried all before it. Much enthusiasm prevailed apparently, and the Morning Post record of the day humorously states 'the disinterested spectator forgot even the dearth of coals and shared the pleasures enjoyed by the Welsh miners in their triumph.'

To-day enthusiasm has not abated one whit. The final results in the championship classes at some of the larger meetings are received with the wildest enthusiasm. The refinement of the age is reflected in the absence of hat and plate throwing or penny trumpet blowing, but the educative influence of the movement is demonstrated in the genuine appreciation of the success of the best choir. A competition meeting itself is a liberal lesson in the musical advance made by the people of Great Britain. There is all tolerance accorded the adjudicators. They never meet with the fate of the old-time brass band judges when they had given an unpopular award; neither is it necessary for them to leave their adjudications to be delivered by someone else while they hurriedly made their way across the Channel. The musical competition adjudicator of to-day is respected. His position is that of a deliverer of living criticism—not a dull thing in cold print the day after. He stands before the vast audience and gives his views, sometimes supported (morally, of course) by his fellow judges. From an adjudicator of experience the remarks are in the nature of ideal musical criticism; he never fails to show the good and the bad or to point out the remedy. It is in this that one of the most valuable features of the movement is found. In it they rise superior to the examination. The candidate is not only put out of his misery at once, but as a rule has some indication as to where he is wrong. Such information from the hands of a competent musician is priceless. Another valuable point is the widening influence of the competition. A choir or a soloist is enabled to hear other choirs or other soloists perform the same thing and to profit thereby. Then the greatest of all the influences is in the introduction of good music. The inferior is never admitted as a test-piece. The compositions set as tests are carefully chosen; they are often the means of musical redemption. In the early days when first a competition is instituted one often finds but small conception of how a part-song should be sung, a ballad given, or a piece played. Then year by year the standard of efficiency goes up until it is almost impossible to conceive anything better. All this has its effect in providing the much-needed musical standard. Those who claim properly conducted musical competitions as the greatest work of the day are not far wrong.

FREE CHURCH MUSICIANS' UNION,

The Competitive Festival of the Free Church Musicians' Union will be held at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway Road, on November 23, 24, and 25. The tests in the eight choral classes include West's 'The Lord hath done great things,' Elvey's 'I was glad when they said unto me,' Thompson's 'I will magnify Thee,' Bairstow's 'The dawn of song,' Leslie's 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' and Stanford's 'Love's folly' (male voices). There are twelve solo-singing classes, one for vocal quartet, and a large section for instrumental competitions. The adjudicators will be Dr. J. D. McClure, Dr. L. N. Fowles, the Rev. E. O. Powell, Mr. George Dodds, Mr. Thomas Facer, Mr. J. T. Lightwood, Mr. J. A. Meale, Dr. David Thomas, and Mr. Enos Watkins. The general manager is Mr. W. C. Webb (10, Nightingale Road, Clapton), who shares with Mr. J. Spink the duties of secretary.

SOUTH LONDON.

So satisfactory has been the progress of this Festival, that the Council have decided to include West London in their scheme, a proposal heartily endorsed by the Hon. Richard Strutt, Chairman of the recently-abandoned Kensington and West London Competitions. The enlarged area takes in all parts of South-East, South-West, and West London, within a radius of twelve miles of Charing Cross, and the organization will in future be known as 'The South and West London Musical Festival.'

The meeting which was to have been held at Arundel Castle on November 14, under the presidency of the Duchess of Norfolk, is postponed until the spring of 1912.

MUSIC LOVERS

with excellent musical taste abound, but under ordinary methods of teaching the majority either have not the courage to learn the piano or, becoming disheartened, have left off playing. Macdonald Smith's Course for Players enables them to play better than ever before, without any drudgery at the keyboard, and his Course for Beginners enables these to learn in a rapid and sure manner hitherto unknown. Write for free illustrated Book "Light on Pianoforte Playing," and state which Course you desire to know about. The results from either are such that it is the cheapest that can be had. If your difficulty is

Ehremayer System of Pianoforte Sight-Playing.

This is the only method which enables pianists of all degrees of proficiency to play at first sight all music that lies within their technical powers. It not only enables pianists to READ difficult music, but to PLAY that music, and it is the playing of the music read that presents the chief difficulty to the pianist.

The system is not only approved by professional musicians, but has the enthusiastic approval of the hundreds of pupils who have taken the course.

JOHN COATES.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

DECEMBER 1, 1911.

JOHN COATES.

If anyone could disprove the injustice of the oft-quoted caustic dictum ascribed to Von Bülow, that a tenor is an illness, surely it is John Coates. His straight figure, his eye, his alert movement, and above all his voice, all betoken high vitality and vim. As a singer he is master of many styles, from the grave to the gay. He can bill and coo the most tender phases of the great passion, or he can electrify you with his dramatic intensity. His diction makes his singing as plain as speech, and his phrasing and accentuation, both musical and verbal, show a rare sensitiveness to fine subtleties. But after all it is the obvious sincerity of the expression and the intellectuality of his singing that magnetise his hearers. The message of the finest music is revealed. He is best with the best music, and can only move when he is moved. The story of the evolution of his fine voice, and still more the story of his career, with all its ups and downs, —and especially the latter, with their bitter and chastening memories,—will, we venture to believe, be matters of interest to all our readers.

John Coates was born on June 29 (St. Peter's Day), 1865, at 1, Girlington Road, near Bradford, Yorkshire. He comes of a musical stock. His ancestors on both sides, for several generations, were all more or less notable singers. His grandfather, another John Coates, had a remarkable counter-tenor voice. He was often urged to go to London to exhibit his powers, but being in the exalted and austere position of attorney's clerk he declined to adopt the profession and lead what he deemed to be a vagabond's life. Just before he died he begged his wife not to allow their two daughters, both of whom had fine voices, to take singing lessons, as the Bradford Choral Society at that time held its practices in a room connected with an inn. This John Coates and his three brothers, William, Joseph, and George, for some years were the only male members of the choir of Bradford Parish Church. William was the Postmaster of Bradford, and sang tenor; George was Inspector of Weights and Measures (an occupation that at least helped him to understand scales, and especially minor ones), and sang bass; and Joseph, who is described as a 'wild-shaver,' was a professional baritone with a wide compass. On one occasion at a Bradford performance of the 'Messiah,' for which he was engaged to sing the bass solos, the tenor failed to come and Joseph sang both parts. He was a wanderer, and thus exemplified the 'vagabond's life' from which his brother John shrank.

Richard Coates, the son of the above-mentioned John, was the father of the present John. He was a musical amateur, and possessed a fine baritone voice. He was choirmaster of Girlington Church, near Bradford, Yorkshire. His brother, William (John Coates's uncle), was a well-known professional tenor singer in London. He was connected with the Temple Church, the Round Catch and Canon Club, and arranged the musical programmes for numerous City dinners. The two sisters already mentioned of this generation had remarkable voices, and sang frequently as amateurs. The mother of the present John Coates was a daughter of John Leach, who had piano shops and a piano factory in Bradford; his brother and two sisters were all singers, and he himself was in his youth organist of Wilsden Church, and in his day had almost a monopoly of the Bradford music teaching. John Coates speaks warmly of his musical indebtedness to his mother. She had a beautiful soprano voice, and as a young woman sang in the Manningham Parish Church Choir and the Bradford Festival Choral Society. She came to London with a picked Yorkshire choir, in order to sing before Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort at Buckingham Palace, and she was also a member of the Handel Festival Choir. While John was a child she was singing, almost all day long about the house, the soprano songs and airs she had heard the great singers perform, and so he assimilated much vocal music before he knew from what operas or oratorios it came. She taught him to sing and his father taught him his notes. There was no pianoforte in the house: the tuning-up was effected by a pitch-fork. Coates still retains a little silver fork given to him when he was born, as a sort of charm, and with the hope that he would maintain the family tradition.

'THE WORDS FIRST.'

It was not long before Coates could read at sight any ordinary vocal music. He well remembers an incident which has had a permanent influence on his outlook as a singer. In the family circle he was asked to sing a song he had not seen before, and was about to sing it straight away, but his aunt put her hand on his shoulder and said 'read the words first.' 'That,' says Mr. Coates, 'is what I have always done since,' and the natural consequence has been that the majority of the songs submitted to him are hopelessly condemned before the music is examined.

CHORISTER TRAINING.

When he was but five years old his father took him on Sundays to Girlington Church where, as already stated, he was choirmaster. A year later, after the family had removed to Little London, a village between Apperley Bridge and Rawdon, young Coates was formally enrolled as a treble chorister in Rawdon Church Choir. It was a long, lonely walk to Rawdon, and on dark nights lanterns had to be taken. Mr. Coates tells us that during the time he was at Leeds recently, when he had to sing Siegfried, he spent a Sunday afternoon in Rawdon Church, and chatted with the verger (son of the verger of Coates's chorister days), only to find that he did not even know the name of Coates. A chastening discovery!

In 1873 another move was made, this time to Manningham (Bradford), and John became a chorister at St. Jude's Church, Bradford, where his uncle, J.G. Walton, was choirmaster. He remembers his surprise being put on over his cassock at the altar rails, and, in accordance with Walton's custom, his voice was dedicated to the Glory of God. Walton was a strong Churchman, and an enthusiastic musician. He was an apostle of Gregorianism and brought out a plain-song service. Young John soon became leader and soloist of the choir, and maintained this position until his voice broke when he was seventeen years of age. Under his uncle's influence he became imbued with Gregorian principles, and grasped the idea that truth of accent was the life of singing. He says now that Anglican chanting is to him meaningless, because it involves much bad accent; and the older and more experienced he gets, the more he realises how much he owes to his training in Gregorian music. When he was eight he went to the Bradford Grammar School. A singing-class was formed, Coates was made leader, and he sang the solos at the school concerts. His first important effort was 'I will extol Thee' (Costa's 'Eli'), with which a great effect was made. He remembers that one day the masters of the school assembled to hear him sing 'top C.' Before he was twelve a great calamity befell him. His father died, after a long illness, at the age of thirty-seven. John was the eldest of four children, and all were unprovided for. A hard struggle was before the stricken mother, and as soon as he was thirteen, John had to leave school and to take a situation as office boy in a warehouse. He continued to sing in the church choir, and the desire to become ultimately a professional singer was his dominant idea. He knew that the fulfilment of his hopes depended upon the bare chance of his having a good voice as an adult. It was with singular foresight that even at this age and with this environment he realised that knowledge of foreign languages would be an advantage to him as a singer. He attended the Church Institute night classes, and worked continually at French and German, and later at Italian and Latin with private assistance. Sometimes he sat up all night at his language studies. He was soon able to utilise his linguistic acquirements by obtaining a situation in a yarn office as book-keeper and foreign correspondent.

His chorister days came to an end on Easter Day, 1882. He remembers that the recessional hymn at the close of evening service was 'The strife is o'er, the battle won,' and how that, at the head of the procession, he walked slower and slower so that he might sing another 'Alleluia' before going through the porch and into the vestry. A pathetic situation for a lad who took himself seriously!

With a view to keep him in touch with old associations, it was decided after a short interval that he should continue to attend the church choir. To this continuity of practice Coates ascribes his slow vocal development. At first he was deputed to sing alto—that somewhat dismal refuge of the old age of a chorister boy's youth—and then, in turn, tenor and bass. This downward exploration was undertaken with more hope than the experience justified. Coates's voice never had the real bass timbre (which, of course, is a more determining factor than mere compass), and the centre of gravity of his voice was always steadily ascending. Nature designed him for a tenor, although she took an unusually long time over the business, perhaps because she wanted to build the foundations firmly.

A trial engagement with the Carl Rosa Company in 1893, for which he sang as Valentine in 'Faust,' resulted in an unfavourable verdict from the directors. His voice was praised for its quality, but it was not considered powerful enough for the work of grand opera. This set-back might very well have crushed an ordinary man's ambition, but Coates was made of sterner stuff. He determined to seek his fortunes in London, and in September, 1893, he relinquished business and journeyed to the great metropolis with his wife and child. He possessed less than £100 with which to fight the world. He thought of studying at the Royal Academy of Music, but on calling there he found he would have to pay a guinea to be heard. So he returned to his little home and consulted his wife. She thought that he ought to be paid a guinea for singing, and the idea was therefore abandoned. Later Coates took a few private lessons from William Shakespeare, who declared that he had 'the typical tenor E.' In 1894, D'Oyly Carte, through Alfred Cellier, gave Coates an opportunity of exhibiting his powers. 'Utopia, Ltd.' was on at the Savoy, and a singer was wanted to play the part of Mr. Golbory for an American tour. Coates sang the part for two nights at the Savoy and was very successful, and was forthwith engaged for the American company at a salary of £8 a week. Wife and child were taken with him to the States, and for three months Coates sang his part in New York and Boston to the great satisfaction of the audiences. Offers to him to remain in the States were made, but as D'Oyly Carte offered an engagement to sing a small part in Messager's 'Mirette,' he returned to London £13 in pocket. Whilst fulfilling this engagement he consulted the late T. A. Wallworth about his voice, and was told by that able teacher that his voice was tenor and was certain to develop in an upward direction. He now drifted into musical comedy rôles, which were specially written for, or transposed up, to suit his voice. In 1895 he was again on tour in the States, and whilst there catarrhal trouble brought about a consultation with Dr. Holbrook Curtis, of New York. This specialist declared that there was a growth that impeded the natural development of the voice, and he advised an operation. Coates shrank from this ordeal at this time, but later, in 1896, when he returned to England to tour with the 'Geisha,' the complaint became insistent, and he consulted Dr. Orwin, the London specialist, who decided that an immediate operation was imperative. Mr. George Edwardes—who, says Coates, 'behaved splendidly'—granted the needed four weeks' leave, and the operation was successfully carried out by Dr. Orwin. The result was that Coates's voice at once sounded younger and fresher.

In March, 1899, feeling that the time was ripe for the step, he decided to break with musical comedy and to endeavour to be identified with grand opera. A tempting offer to sing in 'Floradora' was refused, and a new struggle for existence was attempted. Savings were rapidly exhausted, debts were incurred, and the future looked black. Then, at the end of 1899, soon after the Boer War broke out, Kipling's 'Absent-minded Beggar' and Sullivan's setting came before the world. On the day on which it appeared Coates went to the Alhambra and offered to sing the song. Sullivan was consulted and at once gave his testimonial, and a satisfactory four weeks' engagement resulted. A leading part in the production of 'The Gay Pretenders,' at the old Globe Theatre in November, 1900, was another welcome oasis. The piece failed, but it served to establish the personal success of Coates, and very soon afterwards he was engaged for a tour of 'Olivette.' Then came what appeared to be one of the great opportunities of his career. In June, 1901, the Covent Garden syndicate engaged him to sing the part of Claudio in Stanford's 'Much ado about nothing,' and later on in 'Faust.' The hope was held out that for the next season he might be cast for some of the principal rôles hitherto associated with M. Jean de Reszké; but it was suggested that meantime he should study and sing abroad, and return to England with the cachet of a Continental reputation. There is food for reflection in this presumption that fashionable opera patrons in this country only appreciate to order. But Coates thought that in any case it would be worth while to adopt the suggestion, and accordingly he studied in Paris under Bouhy and then went on to Cologne. Here, through the kind offices of Capelmeister Mühldorfer, he was introduced to Julius Hofmann, the director of the Opera House. What occurred on this occasion will be best described in Coates's own words. He says:

My meeting with Hofmann, August 27, 1901, was, I think, the greatest event in my operatic career. When I was introduced to him by Mühldorfer he was very tired after a rehearsal, and did not want to see anybody, much less 'an English tenor'; but I think the fact that I spoke German and my great earnestness made him at once favourably disposed towards me. When he asked me what I would sing, I replied in German 'anything that he would like.' He seemed interested in me at once. He then asked me if I would sing 'Lohengrin's Narration' to him in German, and I immediately said I would. This seemed to strike him very much, and I was taken on to the stage, one of the répétiteurs was summoned, and to Hofmann and Mühldorfer in the stalls I sang it, knowing all that it meant to me. Hofmann was enthusiastic, and asked me if I would sing the Cavatina from 'Faust.' I said I would do so with pleasure, but asked to be allowed to sing it in French, as I had recently sung it in French at Covent Garden. After I had sung it, his enthusiasm knew no bounds: he hurried back on to the stage, banged his hands on my shoulders and said 'I'll do everything for you.' He at once engaged me to give five special performances of 'Lohengrin,' 'Faust' and 'Romeo,' in December, 1901. He seemed to take a great pride in introducing me to the Continent, and stipulated that I should sing first in Cologne. It is difficult for me to express my sense of all I owe to Hofmann: he treated me more like a son than as a foreign artist, and his death two or three years ago was a very great blow to me.

After returning to England to sing at the 1901 Leeds Festival, Coates went back to Cologne to make his débüt. He was cast for 'Lohengrin,' but it was thought advisable that he should first give a sample of his singing at a concert that was to take place on the night before the opera performance. At this concert he sang 'Comfort ye' and 'Every valley,' and was recalled once; the Cavatina from 'Faust' (in French), and was recalled three times; and the 'Meistersinger Preislied' (in German), and was recalled six times. 'Lohengrin' was a great triumph for the singer, and it was followed by an equal success in 'Romeo and Juliet.' This success led to an engagement to appear at the Royal Opera Houses at Berlin and Hanover, and at the Leipsic Gewandhaus Concerts; and there were offers of permanent engagements from the Cologne and Frankfort Opera Houses. So it seemed that the needed international reputation had been achieved, and that, therefore, the road to Covent Garden was paved. But when the vague 'understanding' came to be understood, the management found that they could offer Coates only minor parts, and at most the understudy of some principal parts. This was a set-back, and the only course consistent with self-respect was to decline the offer. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a successful operatic singer to go down the rungs of the ladder he has climbed. But Covent Garden did again hear Coates, first under the auspices of the Moody-Manners Company in 1902, then in the Carl Rosa season of 1909, and again during the two Beecham seasons in 1910.

In 1902, at the Worcester Festival, Coates was memorably successful in singing the name-part in Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' and he has since been closely identified with Elgar's other oratorios, and with 'King Olaf.' During the last decade he has sung at all the leading musical festivals held in this country, including Sheffield, Cardiff, Birmingham, Bristol, Leeds, Norwich, Newcastle, Hereford, Gloucester, Brighton, Southport, Elgar Festival (Covent Garden), the Handel Festival, &c. Since 1901 he has gone abroad regularly, and has sung in opera at Dresden, Hanover, Hamburg, Bremen, Düsseldorf, Frankfort, Mannheim, Cologne, Mainz, Amsterdam, The Hague, Norderney, Barmen, Leipsic and Berlin, and also he has appeared at Paris. He has been to Barmen year after year to sing in oratorio, &c., including 'The Messiah' (twice), 'St. Paul,' 'Belshazzar' (twice)—an oratorio never heard in England now—the 'St. Matthew' Passion (three times on consecutive nights). When in Leipsic, at a Gewandhaus Concert conducted by Nikisch, he was specially asked to sing 'If with all your hearts,' which Mendelssohn composed in that city.

In 1906 he sang all the tenor parts at the Cincinnati Festival. In 1907 he again appeared with the Moody-Manners Company at the Lyric Theatre, London, and afterwards went on tour with them as principal tenor. He renewed his experience of musical comedy by touring with 'Dorothy' in 1908, and he created the chief tenor part in Ethel Smyth's fine opera, 'The Wreckers,' when it was produced at His Majesty's Theatre in 1909. During the Beecham light opera season at this theatre in the same year he sang in Offenbach's charming 'Tales of Hoffmann' nearly forty times, and he appeared in Missa's 'Muguette' and D'Albert's 'Tiefeland.' In the spring of this year (1911) he was the Siegfried in Herr Denhof's production of the 'Ring' in Leeds, Manchester and Glasgow. He is now on tour with the Quinlan Opera Company as principal tenor. He has already sung with great success in Puccini's 'The Girl of the Golden West,' and the repertory for which he is engaged includes 'Hoffmann,' 'Don José,' 'Tristan,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Radames.' The tour of this company will embrace many towns of the United Kingdom, and will extend to South Africa and Australia.

The foregoing life-story shows that John Coates's chief music school has been the public platform, and his principal professor has been himself. He is now in the prime of his powers. May he long continue to delight us with his art!

THE ORIGIN OF TO-DAY'S MUSICAL IDIOM.

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

The very daring modern composers commonly called impressionists, in want of a more accurate term, have individually and collectively elicited more sarcasm and destructive criticism than any in history. This is known to be more or less the lot of all innovators; and not long ago M. Vincent d'Indy was able to show, by intermingling criticisms written in 1902 of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' with criticisms written in 1605 or thereabouts of Monteverdi's operas, that history repeats itself indeed. The same arguments and reproach (of obscurity, impurity of diction, cacophony, &c.) appeared in either case in almost the same words. In the hands of some art-judges, Beethoven has fared no better in his time than nowadays Debussy. But the detractory movement against musical impressionism seems to be unusually violent and general. In this very year 1911, after ample time for reflection has been available, one reads assertions like this, one which I select at random: 'In Debussy's "Pelléas et Mélisande," music plays so subordinate and insignificant a part . . . that the composer cannot be mentioned in the same breath with serious dramatists that wield the language of emotions through its gamut and have an infinitely varied palette . . .' It is also often alleged that all impressionist composers imitate Debussy. This second assumption, and the first in so far as it is not the mere statement of a taste—and as such unimpeachable until posterity shall have pronounced—I believe to be founded on a misunderstanding which can easily be made clear.

Some critics consider Debussy as the creator of an idiom, of a style, of methods entirely his own, which have sprung out of nothing and for which his whimsical fancy and his deliberate quest of originality at any price stand alone responsible. If so, one might to a certain extent be justified in calling plagiarists all musicians who use similar idiom, style and methods, and even in judging his and their music, produced in defiance to all laws of evolution and tradition, to consist of mere monstrosities and to deserve but scorn.

Facts prove such a view to be absolutely inaccurate. There is no denying, of course, that so many neologisms and infringements of so-called 'rules' have seldom if ever appeared at once. But it has been the critics' and the public's misfortune that most of the forerunners of modern 'impressionism' should have until now attracted little notice, and that the works of Debussy and of the artists whose tendencies are similar should have taken everybody unawares. Such being the case, one could hardly expect bewilderment not to follow. But assuredly, had not almost all artistic facts that lead up to the expansion of to-day been overlooked, the public and the critics, who after all do nothing but follow the creative artist's lead sooner or later, although haud passibus aequis, would have borne the shock better.

It is self-evident that an artistic style cannot be devised as are a conventional language like Esperanto or a system of industrial labour. Its birth is slow, gradual. It arises when its time comes, from tendencies and attempts often distant, scattered, and sometimes casual. Even if the preliminary symptoms are not known, one can but surmise that they exist. Therefore, it is astonishing that one should have assumed this fundamental law to be reversed in the case under notice, and that none should have tried systematically to trace back to its origin and thence to follow in its development to-day's most striking movements.

Whoever undertakes this task will have to take into account first the spirit of 'impressionist' art, then its methods, then its characteristics of form, structure, rhythms and idiom (tonalities, modalities, chords and their combinations, melodic inflections, &c., with the resulting colour-effects). To show the return that may be expected from such a study it will suffice briefly to examine the last point.

The melodic and harmonic particularities—one should never separate the two—whose association distinguishes modern idiom, with its extension of tonal feeling and of harmonic superposition, may be traced back, if one sets aside folk-music, whose influence on to-day's art is considerable, as far as Chopin.

Several of Chopin's works, like the Barcarolle and the Etude, Op. 10, No. 3, will in that respect amply repay study. I shall quote here but one bar from the Etude, in which appear the typical ninth and undulating movement:

Franz Liszt's works afford even more characteristic and far more numerous examples. For instance, in 'Les jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este' ('Années de Pèlerinage,' third volume) almost every bar will be found to deserve attentive consideration for its boldness in tone- and colour-effects akin to the boldest dared by a Debussy or a Ravel.

But three composers, the first Russian and the two others French, should be named and studied before all others: Moussorgsky (1839-81), Chabrier (1841-94), and M. Erik Satie.

One can easily understand that the last-named should be little known: among contemporary musicians he appears as a freelance, and a very eccentric one, whose musical and other freaks may well disturb the seriously minded critic's composure or make him fear a hoax. Moreover, his music for the most part either has remained unpublished, or has appeared in scattered and fragmentary wise. But there is no such reason as regards Chabrier, whose often beautiful works deserve popularity in spite of some defects, and Moussorgsky, who is one of the world's greatest musicians and will eventually be acknowledged as such by all.

If Moussorgsky is little known abroad, it is because his artistic ideal and his methods were so novel, so disconcerting, his indifference to 'rules' was so profound, that the only people who came into contact with his works, the Russians, either were appalled or remained blind. So that no pains were taken to propagate his music, which was not brought under the foreign music-lover's notice until the recent time when a reaction has begun to make amends.

This very freedom of thought and style is now what we understand to be admirable in Moussorgsky's works. The composer, who always strove to attain simple and straightforward truth of expression through forcible colours as well as through subtle shades, has created an idiom astonishingly rich and flexible, including an abundance of novel chords and inflections out of which springs practically the whole language of modern impressionism.

For instance, this line from his opera 'Boris Godounov' (1874)* would certainly be attributed to the days of 'Debussysm' by anyone not knowing its origin:

And so would this one, from his cycle of 'Songs without sunlight':

* Quoted from the original, unrevised edition, now unfortunately out of print. All others, 'emended' by Rimsky-Korsakov, are untrustworthy.

A score and more of such examples could be quoted. Not only these soft 'atonal' harmonies, but also the harsher whole-tone scales and aggregates, much used by Debussy and other contemporaries, appear in several parts of 'Boris Godounov': †

As a further specimen of these gently undulating melodies for which the ultra-modern school shows a special fondness, after the instances from Chopin and from 'Without sunlight,' this one, from Moussorgsky's song-cycle 'The Nursery' (1870), may be given for its remarkably extended tonal scheme:

In a word, Moussorgsky—the first of modern composers to have mastered modern freedom of idiom—stands in very close relation with to-day's most advanced school. But other Russians, like Borodine, should not be neglected. Is not this motive from Borodine's 'Prince Igor' (1876-87):

most strikingly like a motive from 'Pelléas and Mélisande' in design and in substance?

The study of Chabrier's music—which affords a curious mixture of commonplaces, even vulgarities, and of exquisite refinements, and whose influence on Debussy has been great, on Ravel still greater—will lead to no less instructive comparisons. It will be enough to give here one instance, from the score of 'Le Roi Malgré lui (1887):

† As Mr. Clutsam in his excellent article on the subject (Musical Times, November, December, 1910) remarks, the free use of the whole-tone scale begins in Russia; not with Moussorgsky, but with Glinka, whose opera 'Rouslan and Ludmila' (1842) affords remarkable examples (quoted in the present writer's biography of Glinka). The first Russian to follow Glinka was Dargomyjski ('The Stone Guest,' 1869).

No. 7.

As for M. Erik Satie, his case, although entirely different, is no less conclusive. He is, it is true, Debussy's junior by four years, being born (at Honfleur) in May, 1866. But as early as 1887 he had written some Sarabands for pianoforte, and shortly after (I believe in 1888) pieces termed by him 'Gymnopédies'—sketchy, undeveloped and formless, but in which almost all the idiosyncrasies of mature 'impressionism's' vocabulary and syntax are forestalled in the most curious way. M. Satie has been a pupil of the Paris Conservatoire, but has discarded all he learned there. When he writes he is guided by the ear alone, not by the eye nor by the intellect. His principle in composition is very rudimentary, since he attempts no sort of organization, of working-out, never follows an idea, and does not seem to possess the composer's higher endowments: but it is the principle that becomes the actual 'impressionist' school's starting point. M. Satie has brought forth—apparently from nowhere, but guided by his ear and fancy—a wealth of raw material of a hitherto unsuspected sort: unset, uncut gems, but beautiful enough not to be mistaken for worthless pebbles; novel harmonies, elusive outlines, strange effects, which occur not accidentally as in works of earlier composers, not even frequently as in Moussorgsky's, but continually and to the exclusion of anything else. His music may be termed almost protoplasmic, but nevertheless must be acknowledged as instinct with a new vital principle which asserts itself fully in the works of more complete artists and better craftsmen.

I have remarked that M. Satie's inventions have sprung out apparently from nowhere, and one might say almost as much of several of Moussorgsky's. This, however, does not mean that we have succeeded only in shifting back the confronted problem: symptoms enough of the gradual transformation and enrichment of musical idiom appear even before Moussorgsky's or M. Satie's birth. And these in turn—Chopin's or Liszt's for instance—can be traced back to their origin, so as to show the unbroken chain of evolution.

To point to such analogies is not to disparage any creative artist of to-day. A Debussy's connection with his forerunners is neither greater nor lesser than is any creative artist's: 'The predecessors of an original Genius of a high order,' says Wordsworth, 'will have smoothed the way for all that he has in common with them;—and much he will have in common; but for what is peculiarly his own, he will be called upon to clear and often to shape his own road.'

In fact, the foregoing remarks have no bearing whatever to the artistic value of Debussy's music or any other—music must always be judged intrinsically. But it is hoped that they may help to make clear one not unimportant point, and to show that the birth of the 'impressionist' school in France, as elsewhere, is like all facts in the history of art a fact of evolution; if younger artists use methods similar to Debussy's, it is no sufficient reason to brand them as his imitators. Imitators there undoubtedly are, and many: but necessary distinctions have not yet been made. When the novelty of methods will have worn out a little, and the new idiom cease to monopolize attention unduly (a common case of the forest not being seen for the trees) and appear in its true light, as a mere vehicle, then it will become far easier to acknowledge the true individuality of certain artists whom one may be for the present inclined to judge, perhaps, a little rashly.

FRANZ LISZT.

OCTOBER 22, 1811—JULY 31, 1886.

By ERNEST NEWMAN.

VI.

As a matter of fact, it is not so much Liszt's sense of form that is generally at fault as his ability to fill the form he knows to be the right one. The 'Orpheus' and 'Mazeppa' are as logically developed and symmetrically balanced as one could wish; the form is the inevitable outcome of the ideas, and the ideas in themselves are admirably appropriate to the subject. If in certain other orchestral works he constructs clumsily here and there, it is not because the system of 'transformation' is per se a less worthy one than the system of 'development,'* but because Liszt himself had not mastered all the possibilities of the method,—as the pioneer could hardly have been expected to do. The new school saw at once that the old type of 'subject' would not do for the new ideas. Their themes necessarily had to be at once longer and more melodically free. Beethoven can evolve a whole world of tone of a particular order out of two or three notes, as in the first movements of the fifth and ninth Symphonies. Brahms's symphonic subjects, again, are often extremely short. In music, indeed, in which the weaving of the pattern is all-important, the smaller your threads the easier it is for you to weave; just as you can make a more varied mosaic out of small than out of large fragments of coloured stone. But you cannot describe a Faust or a Dante and their environment in terms so short and simple as the 'subject' of the ordinary symphony. Your symphonic-poem themes are as a rule much longer and more complex in their windings. This, it is evident, makes it more difficult to build with them. A theme like the first one of Brahms's second Symphony, or that of the opening of the Violin concerto—a simple unfolding of the tonic and the dominant chords—really almost does a great deal of its own working-out, so obvious are the modifications it suggests. Moreover it can be divided, and the fragments used separately, without our feeling that any violence has been done to it. To what interesting uses, for example, does Brahms put the three notes that introduce the theme of the Symphony :

Liszt's problem was a far harder one than this. To express a certain vein of psychology or to paint a portrait a longish theme was necessary,—one of so continuous a melodic character that it was not half so 'workable' as the themes based on a common chord,—like many of those of Brahms,—and not divisible into easily buildable fragments ; because its whole point and veracity lay in its closeness to nature throughout its total sweep. And having stated his primary theme he had frequently no other device than to reiterate it in extenso immediately,—as at the opening of 'Les Préludes'—because he saw no way of varying it without altering the poetic idea it was meant to suggest. Hence the curious parallelism of many of his pages, and the sense of stiff-jointedness that they give us. Later on composers saw that the most workable themes for the symphonic poem and the programme symphony were those put together on a kind of fishing-rod principle, the full length being made up of easily separable sections. In 'Till Eulenspiegel,' for example, Strauss not only transforms the themes as a whole but takes up fragments of them in turn and gives a new meaning to these. In Elgar's Symphonies and his Violin concerto the most skilful use is made of this principle. Liszt apparently had not the gift of inventing themes of this kind ; he drew his character or painted his scene in one long sweep of the pencil or the brush, without thinking of the inevitable monotony of mere repetition of this.

Perhaps the fault lay in the character of his programmes. The vaguer the programme, it goes without saying, the freer is the composer left in the manipulation of his musical material. Liszt's programmes very often were not only extremely precise and four-square, but they had a strong family resemblance to each other. He was overfond of the poetic 'motive' of the good man, oppressed by fate, either winning his way through to triumph—as in the 'Mazepa'—or attaining posthumous honour or glory—as in the 'Tasso' and 'Dante.' Poetic schemes so obvious as this necessarily led to a certain obviousness of musical architecture. Intent on his plan of showing the same character in different aspects or environments, Liszt could only repeat the original picture-theme with some modifications of tempo, rhythm, or harmony. It is not every theme that will preserve its original virtue through simple metamorphoses of this kind. In the 'Faust' symphony the ironic changes that are rung in the final movement ('Mephistopheles') upon the earnest themes of the first movement ('Faust') are thoroughly effective. The system, indeed, works most happily in the service of burlesque,—Wagner, for instance, has only to turn the dignified sostenuto of the Mastersingers' theme into a quick staccato to give us a perfect picture of the irresponsible apprentices. For more serious purposes the method has its drawbacks. In 'Tasso,' for example, Liszt turns the earlier 'Lamento' into a 'Trionfo' by transposing the theme of the opening from the minor to the major, and taking it in a quicker tempo. The result is simply to give a touch of parody to the deeply expressive theme, as a couple of quotations will show :

In 'Les Préludes' the tranquil 12-8 theme in the horns is similarly spoiled towards the finish by being hustled into a scherzando.

Yet, I repeat, stiffly as a good many of Liszt's longer works move, it was not his sense of form that was at fault so much as his occasional technical inability to realise his own high ideal of form,—an ideal in which there was no room for mere facile note-spinning and pattern-weaving of the ordinary kind, an ideal of pregnancy of thought and unity of treatment throughout the whole of a work. It was no bungler in form who achieved the consistency of a number of the songs, or that of the 'Orpheus,'—for the form of which both Wagner and Saint-Saëns have expressed their admiration,—or who cast the vital substance of Goethe's 'Faust' into a form at once so concise and comprehensive as that of the 'Faust' symphony. His incessant desire for organic unity in his music is shown again in his sacred works, in which the happily-applied system of the leit-motiv produces some splendid results. Take as an example his setting of the 13th Psalm,—'How long wilt Thou forget me, O Lord?'—where the eloquent drooping phrase to which the first 'Wie lange' is set is not only put to a multiplicity of expressive uses in its original form, but is utilised again, in another shape, in the changed music to the verse, 'Consider and hear me, O Lord my God !', and in yet other forms in the joyous phrases to which the final verse,—'I will sing unto the Lord'—is set. The whole work has the unity of a Wagnerian scene. The 'Graner Messe' is given an unusual consistency by the same employment of 'representative themes'; how finely coherent, in particular, the 'Credo' is made in this way, and what significance is given to the 'Benedictus' and the 'Dona nobis pacem' by the fact that they are constructed upon the same theme as the 'Christe eleison'!

VII.

There can be little doubt that had he had a different upbringing his mature music would have been free from most of the weaknesses or common-places that occasionally mar it. As it is, even his best work occasionally gives us the impression that it is not the very best of which he was capable. His early associations had entered too deeply into his impressionable soul for them ever to be quite eradicated. His familiarity with the formulae of the effusive Italian opera school is sometimes too evident even in his finer work: many a time a page or two of excellent writing is marred by some inexplicable descent into bathos or some slipshod, machine-made cadence. He is least likeable when his melody has that over-sentimental savour and odour that is the product of excessive earnestness unrelieved by humour and unpurified by self-criticism of the right kind. In his younger days especially he was inclined to an oily kind of sentimental super-emphasis; his melody doth protest too much, comes to us with hands too appealingly open and all its soul too visibly in its eyes. He was addicted to the same mild vice in his prose. In his prefaces especially he is apt to become too didactic and effusive. The more flowery passages may be the work of the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein; but the fact that Liszt adopted them as his own shows that they were the expression of his own thoughts. His undeniably authentic prose too is also liable to fall into an excess of imagery that is the very counterpart of the overdone sentiment of his melody at its worst.

For the kind of work he set out to do, again, his technique was not always adequate. Fine orchestral colorist as he is, even his orchestral writing bears many signs of being conceived in terms of the pianoforte. His orchestral texture is predominantly homophonic; it was left to Strauss and the others to give the poetic orchestral work the polyphonic fascination of classical music. When Liszt aims at orchestral polyphony he is apt to be a little naive, as in the too obvious combination of a couple of themes in 'Tasso' to express the union of two literary ideas; it reminds us of the childlike pride with which Berlioz, when he did this kind of thing, used to draw the reader's attention to it in a footnote. Musical suggestion of this order needs to be done very subtly if we are to respond to it without a smile. In 'Les Préludes,' for example, the answering and antithesis of themes are too transparent to be convincing; in his effort to tell his story clearly Liszt fails to make his musical tissue continuous. That the two ideals can be perfectly combined has been shown by Strauss, particularly in his 'Don Quixote.'

Liszt's problems, in fact, were all too new for him to have any hope of solving them all. He endowed music with a hitherto unknown rhetorical force; but he did not always succeed in making his rhetorical line beautiful and lucid in itself,—and without this it is not music. The problem of characterization in music is only just beginning to reveal its true difficulties to us. That music can and must be characteristic upon occasion goes without saying: the constant efforts in this direction of practically every great musician,—especially Bach,—are a proof of how deeply-rooted this mode of musical thinking is. But there quickly comes a point, as some of Strauss's later work has shown us, at which admitted fidelity of description does not compensate us for the ear's loss of a musical outline that is interesting in and by itself. It is the old difficulty of serving two masters,—the difficulty that constantly faces the poetic musician in some form or other. Mozart's praise of a certain opera was that 'it was not only dramatic music, but music.' The best thing we can say of really good characteristic music is that it is not only characteristic but music. Liszt is most rarely ugly in the sense that the later Strauss can be; but at times we feel that he is giving us a formula of description rather than a living image of the thing described,—the actor's gesture or stride rather than the impressive word to which these should only be the accompaniment. In the 'Fantasia-Sonata Après une Lecture de Dante,' fine work as it is, we are particularly conscious of this tendency to give us the machinery of rhetoric rather than the substance of poetry, to parade before us the symbols and trappings of emotion rather than to express the heart of the emotion itself, to print the mere recipe without providing the ingredients of the dish.

But once more, all these failings are those of the pioneer, with a vision of many new things to be done which he himself has not the full power to do. His fine work—of which there is really a great deal more than the man in the street imagines—is sufficient to prove that he was a born composer, and not, as the foolish old taunt used to go, a mere pianist with a mania for composition. His greatest misfortune as a composer was that he found himself comparatively late in life: but one has only to compare any of the later work with earlier work of the same kind—the third set of 'Années de Pèlerinage,' for example, with the other two—to realise that at every stage he was shedding some of his crudities and commonplaces, and reaching out into fields of musical expression that had hardly been touched before. He was, above all, a progressist; go back along some half-dozen of the lines that mean most for modern music and musical criticism and you will find Liszt at the other end of them. In his sense of the need of quickening music with life, and of giving it a unity and spontaneity like that of life itself; in his war against routine and formalism and the teachers who deal out 'form' to their students much in the way, as he once said, that a regimental tailor deals out uniforms to a squad of recruits; in his admirable blend of sympathy for every new thing that was good, and intelligent reverence for the great things of the past; in his insistence on the musician's need for all-round culture if he is to speak like a living voice; in these and many other respects he is the very type of what the progressive musician should be in every age.

AN EPOCH-MAKING COMPOSER.

Get out your best and newest music-type, master printer, and ye proof-readers, turn on your keenest powers of scrutiny, for I have that to quote which shall tax you to the uttermost. The work is modest enough in scope, being entitled merely 'Drei Klavier-stücke, Op. 11,' but its publication marks an era in our art. We have had composers who have sought to abolish form, tonality, rhythm, melody and various other attributes of music—'dispense with' would be a better expression, perhaps—and we have decided that it is very clever of them, and that they are distinctly worthy of encouragement. How much more admirable, then, must be the man who can succeed in going further than this! He whom I speak of—wild horses shall not tear from me his name—has produced three pieces of an originality beyond all bounds, a novelty of aim which disconcerts all attempts at criticism, and with an atmosphere—ah, that dear expression!—hitherto unbreathed, or, shall we say, uninspired?

The first of the three pieces is the least startling; he warms to his work as he proceeds. Commencing with this simple subject:

there soon follows a highly novel passage commencing thus:

which brings us to the following unique effect:

I understand the composer to mean that the four notes of the right hand are to be depressed silently (without pedal), when the upper G will be heard as a harmonic. Doubtless this requires a pianoforte—or an ear—of unusual make to bring off: I have failed to hear it, so far. There are 42 more bars after this, all different, and the piece comes to an end with these notes:

It will be noticed that, with an almost morbid dread lest the player should go astray, the composer marks nearly every note throughout with an accidental, whether it requires one or not.

The second piece does not lend itself readily to quotation; but there is one sequence of chords—which we may so term these collections of notes—which ought to be placed on record, for neither this composer nor any other is likely to hit on it again; it is pure inspiration:

But the third piece is the wonderful one. It largely consists in passages of full chords in semiquavers and demisemiquavers, which require three staves to write them down and are so difficult as to be beyond most people. I fancy if they were transcribed for the pianola and the roll reversed they would sound still better. If my indulgent editor will grant the space I would like to quote the end of this piece, because it is a lesson to us all:

Now, seriously, my readers, the above are fair samples of the latest thing in pianoforte music, put forth, not by a mad author on his own initiative, but published in a well-known cheap edition of considerable standing. Said I not again and again that we English are fifty years behind every other nation in music?

Of what avail are Mr. Clutsam's gentle babblings about the possibilities of the tonal scale? Of what avail are my own complainings that it is impossible to be ugly? Hardly are my words dead and cold when up comes a small German, who sends us all staggering and makes Richard Strauss a mere back number. Our Cyril Scotts and Holbrookes have made a gallant fight, but it is time we owned to defeat and in this, as in most other things, allowed the invincible Fatherland to walk over us. I know that the mere fact of one's expostulating against such atrocities sets the perverse 'progressive' party to admiring them, but I think I can prevent that by simply suppressing the perpetrator's name. After all, why should I give him a gratuitous advertisement? And if my readers like to think that this is all a joke and that my quotations emanate from my own ingenious brain, I shall deem it a compliment to my ingenuity, though there could hardly be a worse aspersion on my taste. And I am not afraid of the real author suing me for libel, for I do not believe he would know his productions if he heard them. Do you? F. CORDER.

Occasional Notes.

The account of the First Musical Festival of the British Empire, begun in our last number and concluded this month, briefly records an extraordinary and successfully-managed enterprise which, owing to the pressure of public affairs in this country, has not received due recognition from the daily Press. Dr. Harriss, as we all know, is a resourceful man with a governing motive in his life, and he is not deterred from a course of action by any ordinary obstacle. The grand tour was a magnificent conception, and it was magnificently carried out. It must have left a deep impression over an immense area in far-off climes, and in view of the fact that the music performed was almost exclusively by British composers, the cause of our native art has been beneficially stimulated. What sacrifice of time, ease and money the scheme entailed we shall never know, but we can well believe that it was considerable. We offer Dr. Harriss and Dr. Coward (who so ably trained and conducted the touring choir), our hearty congratulations on their memorable national achievement.

The philosophy of applause, recalls, and encores at concerts has never been adequately investigated. Why, after hearing a charming piece of music finely performed, should we set to work to make absurd and distressing noises? This is too deep a question for us to probe just now. We are more concerned to protest against a small, and sometimes insignificant, minority of an audience being allowed to have their way in demanding encores against the wishes of the majority. The question is complicated by the excessive and almost electric amiability of artists in responding. Sometimes they obey unwillingly, because to do so is the line of least resistance; and sometimes, to their honour, they decline to perform again.

The London Philharmonic Concert given on November 7, provided an object-lesson in this study of the relation of applause to encores. Rachmaninoff had played his Pianoforte concerto in the first part, and afterwards he played in succession three solos, including the inevitable Prelude in C sharp minor. It was late, and there was still to follow a Liszt Symphonic-poem. But notwithstanding the directors' piteous and futile notice in the programme, asking the audience not to insist on encores which, as they truly say, 'prevent many subscribers who live at a distance from remaining to the end,' the effervescent and exasperating minority persisted in demanding a fourth solo, and they were allowed to have their way. We were careful to observe that the demand came from not more than one twentieth of the audience. In whole rows of the stalls not a single hand was raised. The consequence of the encore granted was that many of the audience were deprived of hearing one of the most magnificent performances of an orchestral work that have ever been given in the Queen's Hall, that of Liszt's Symphonic-poem, 'Les Préludes,' under Mengelberg.

A significant fact about concert audiences is that the feminine element is predominant, and we believe it is increasingly so, although we have nothing to go by except a general impression. At some recent Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall we calculated that there were about twelve ladies to one man. Perhaps the disparity might be redressed if concert-givers offered to admit the mere man at half-price.

In a letter from Sir Charles Stanford, which appeared in The Times on October 30, it is noted that Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel have decided to alter in their edition of the score the misprinted metronome indication given for the Trio of Beethoven's Choral Symphony which, says Sir Charles, 'has so disastrously affected the modern reading of the second movement, by conductors who are unaware of the facts.' This is an old discussion which carries us back to the time of Manns and Grove, in the palmy days of the Crystal Palace. In the printed edition of the score and all the pianoforte arrangements we know of, the metronome rate which was fixed by Beethoven himself for the Scherzo is  $\text{♩} = M. 116$ . The Trio in two-time is marked  $\text{♩} = 116$ , and therefore directs that a whole bar of the movement is to be played at the same rate as a whole bar of the Scherzo.

It has been clear for many years that the semibreve metronome indication in the Trio should be a minim, and therefore that the movement should be taken at half the rate indicated. This was pointed out by Sir George Grove in a paper read at the Musical Association on February 12, 1895. He said that in the original score (which was exhibited in the Loan Collection at the Albert Hall, 1885) 'the tail of the minim in the folio is very faint, but the rest of the note is unquestionably a minim, and not a semibreve; and also the direction is repeated, engraved below the score as well as above it; and there the tail is perfectly distinct.'

In a letter to the Westminster Gazette (whose musical critic commented on The Times letter), Dr. McNaught says 'I feel constrained to ask whether any of your musical readers have ever heard at home or abroad a conductor attempt to take the movement at the impossible freak pace of metronome 116 for the semibreve? I have heard the work fairly often under the most eminent conductors, but never at anything like this pace.' The interpretation of the metronome direction in connection with the character of the rhythm of the Trio is no doubt complicated by the direction near the end of the Scherzo, 'Stringendo il tempo,' starting from M. 116, and leading to the Trio which is marked Presto, and is still to be M. 116; a pace that does not suggest the idea of Presto. But there seems no reason to doubt that the Stringendo does not necessarily lead up to a faster beat at the Trio. It was Beethoven's delightful way to lead to the unexpected.

Sir Frederic Cowen, at a dinner given in his honour by the Authors' Club, on October 23, made a speech in which he masqueraded as the worm that turns, and a very good turn it was. His topic was the question: 'Is the critic a blessing or a curse to music?' To ask the question whether he is a curse implies that there is some doubt, but we must all admit that the word is often freely employed in connection with musical criticism. Sir Frederic expressed his belief that under proper conditions, genuine musical criticism was a wholesome and useful thing. But the critic should be properly educated as to his ear and æsthetics. He summed up his conclusions as regards English musical criticism by saying:

It is for the most part honest in its endeavour to discern the good from the bad, and to lead the public to what at least it considers the truth, and it is kindly disposed towards anything which, according to its lights, shows genuine worth. I am not sure, however, whether criticism is absolutely necessary to the advancement of art, and I cannot help thinking that, even if it did not exist at all, genuine talent would still find its way to the front. A mouth-to-mouth success upon spreads. But criticism is an accepted and recognised institution all over the world, and, this being so, we should be glad that with us, at least, it so largely fulfils its duties with integrity and honesty of purpose. I will not go so far as to say that the critic is an absolute blessing, but he is a very useful guide for the public, and sometimes even for the artist, always supposing that he employs his critical powers with intelligence and conscientiousness; the curse is when these powers are misapplied.

We are requested again to state that the Complimentary Banquet to be given to the directors of the firm of Novello & Co. will be held in the large hall of De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Victoria Embankment, on Wednesday, December 6, at 7.0 p.m. A very large and representative gathering is expected to be present. Further particulars can be obtained from the hon. secretaries, Dr. J. E. Borland, Dr. E. Markham Lee, and Dr. T. Lea Southgate (19, Manor Park, Lee, S.E.).

The Daily Graphic of November 21 gave a portrait of Madame Teresa Carreño, and announced that the famous pianist would visit London for the first time on November 23. If this lady plays anything like so admirably as the Madame Carreño well-known to London concert-goers, and who had such a splendid reception on November 4 at Queen's Hall, the musical public should have flocked in their thousands to hear her. The Daily Mail, in recording that Madame Albani sang 'Ombra mai fu' at a concert, stated that the air is taken from Handel's celebrated Largo. We are prepared to be told next that Bach's well-known Prelude is founded on Gounod's 'Ave Maria.'

We have much pleasure in stating that Mr. William Wallace has been appointed honorary secretary to the Philharmonic Society.

ON TRAINING IN MUSICAL THEORY.

A memorandum has recently been issued (May 1, 1911) by the professors of music, or those connected with the musical examinations, at five of our Universities, on the subject of Strict Counterpoint; and the document bears also the imprimatur of the Royal College of Organists, a body which examines more candidates in this subject than all other bodies combined. With the rightness or wrongness of the decisions tabulated in this memorandum we have, for the present, no concern. But the time would seem to be ripe for a consideration of the wisdom of our present methods of training in musical theory, both from the a priori and the a posteriori standpoint. With that end in view, any discussion will naturally follow the lines suggested by three questions:

- (1.) What is the object of theoretical musical teaching?
- (2.) What methods are now generally followed?
- (3.) Do these methods produce the results we desire?

(1.) With regard to the first question, there is a fallacy extant which, though plausible and even trenchant in the hands of an iconoclast, seems to us to be a mere petitio principii. It usually takes the blunt form of stating that musical theory is taught with a view of turning out composers; and then follows the dogmatic statement that in England such teaching is a self-condemned failure. The obvious parallel of ordinary education suggests itself at once as an answer. Does a child learn reading and writing with any view of becoming a literary creator in a high sense? Is he not rather becoming acquainted with the mere tools of the craft, with which it also happens to be necessary for a poet or prose-writer to become acquainted? Out of the sum total of those who acquire such an acquaintance will the few great writers arise, but no one will assuredly be found to argue that a postulated absence of creative power should rob any child of his right to the primary initiation. 'But,' it may well be answered by those loth to abandon their position, 'reading and writing are necessary for normal human intercourse altogether apart from any literary aspect of life'; so let the parallel be pushed a little farther. Whatever may be the objection to our higher education on its literary or classical side, it has always been admitted that its advantage is that the second-rate, or non-creative, mind is thereby enabled to absorb, act on, and propagate the thoughts of the first-rate or creative intellects. Genius will out, and will master its material, perhaps more often than not with little or no training; but works of genius will be appealing to mere open-mouthed amazement unless the audience has learned by training to appraise what the genius has assimilated by instinct. Hence with one reservation, which the answer to our third question will bring to light, it would appear a tenable position to take up that theoretical training in music should ignore the synthetical aim of composition and endeavour to teach, by an analysis of process, an appreciation of great ideas.

(2.) Turning to the actual methods of teaching theory now in vogue, it cannot be claimed that they are the result of very deep or exhaustive thought. In this, as in so many other educational problems, the line of least resistance has been followed. On the one hand our students are dosed ad nauseam with figured bass,—an elementary and non-musical device whose sole object is to show what any chord really is,—and, having spent years in overcoming the difficulties of these unmusical puzzles, they are allowed to consider they have mastered the subject of harmony. On the other hand the ingenuity of schoolmen has invented, under the name of 'strict counterpoint,' a complementary form of puzzle,—horizontal instead of perpendicular,—fettered with innumerable laws not even agreed upon by the initiated, yet not drawn (even ostensibly) from the practice of any age, and avowedly not connected with any human aspect of music; and the student, having worried his brain into the power of intertwining a few strands of shoddy in this fashion, is presented to the world as a master of part-writing. It is impossible to regard the situation as humorous, since its defenders, ignoring results, still stand at the last ditch with the heroism of the Old Guard. They know, as examiners, that candidates who can work their figured basses and strict counterpoint with the precision of machines break down at the first call for real musicianship; they know, as teachers, that the pupils who most readily acquire these powers are not the most musically gifted. But their inadaptability is adamant, and conscience and common-sense combined fail to induce them to part with what is, to so many of them, their sole stock-in-trade.

(3.) Our final question would seem to be already answered. Putting aside, as not germane to the issue, the fact that few great composers have been produced by the system we are arraigning, no one who has had the opportunity of judging will maintain that the average musician we are producing is characterized by the firm critical grip of true musicianship. It is not a case of the eternal question, 'How far are we behind Germany in the matter?'; for Germany herself, in the word 'Kapellmeister,' provides us with the very type of musician whose multiplication we are deploring. It is rather a question of whether, in the place of apostles of living art, we are not breeding a race of complacent grammarians. The suspicion that this may be true has already led half the world to look on a musical degree, University or otherwise, as carrying with it the stigma of sterility. Yet such degrees do not set the standard or define the curriculum of musical training in the sense that the University classical requirements control the public-school time-sheet; rather do they humbly follow the fashion by examining in those subjects in which they know their candidates will have been laboriously prepared. And it is here that we think the subscribers to the 'memorandum' have missed their opportunity. Granted that the present curriculum is sacrosanct, then their decisions are all in the right directions; they standardize first principles where the greatest diversity of custom formerly prevailed, and they are as progressive as the limits of a purely conventional science will allow. But had they thrown down the gauntlet and claimed the right henceforth to examine artistic results and not mechanical processes, they might then have relegated these props and scaffoldings of music to their legitimate place in the initiation of the tyro, thereby regaining for degrees in general some of their lost kudos, securing (as the final court of appeal) some control of the course of theoretical training, and earning for ever the gratitude of those who now have qualms as to the general vitality of English musicianship.

THE LONDON OPERA HOUSE.

BY HERMANN KLEIN.

Great cities, like great minds, often think alike. I remember very well in New York seven years ago the same prevalent feeling of doubt and incredulousness, on the eve of the first opening of Mr. Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House, as was palpable in London last month just before the inauguration of his new Opera House in Kingsway. What is the reason for this feeling? Is it lack of confidence in the man, or disbelief in the practicability of the thing that he proposes to do? Neither, quite, yet perhaps something of both; for everybody cannot be expected to know that Mr. Hammerstein has a habit of accomplishing the task that he sets himself to perform. But the real reason for the scepticism that follows in his trail lies, to my thinking, in the extremely venturesome, not to say risky nature of the operatic enterprises which he loves to undertake, and the highly original manner in which he carries them out.

Never was there an impresario, American or European, quite so daring. He knows it himself and rejoices in the fact. I believe nothing could make Oscar Hammerstein more proud than that the inhabitants of two hemispheres should unite in calling him the 'Barnum of Opera.' He does things on the same huge scale as the famous circus showman, and with rather more lasting materials, seeing that he prefers bricks and mortar to a tent, however vast. But, according to his own account, it is the building of an opera-house—the details of architecture and the superintendence of the construction—that he most enjoys. On the night that Mr. Hammerstein gave his 'private view' of the London Opera House, and afforded the artistic world of the Metropolis an opportunity of criticising his new structure (incidentally, also, of enjoying his hospitality), he said to me, in all seriousness, 'Now that the place is finished and ready, the part of the business that I like best is over and done with!'

Nevertheless, as a born strategist, Mr. Hammerstein will doubtless continue to enjoy the labour of directing his newest establishment, precisely as he revelled in the same delicate occupation at his magnificent opera-houses in New York and Philadelphia. The great question for him now is the sort of response that London is going to make to his bold adventure. As a corollary to that, the great question for London is, Are we going to find at this palatial new theatre an operatic entertainment of the class and character that really interests and attracts us; that is, in short, worth the high-priced tariff demanded for it? The answer to the latter query has already to some extent been vouchsafed. Indeed, it would have been passing strange if Mr. Hammerstein, after his experience in New York, had failed to set himself an equally high standard here; or, after setting it up in his prospectus—wherein he says 'Grand opera can only succeed when it is presented "grand" in every detail; it must be "grand" in auditorium and on the stage; "grand" in singers, musicians, scenery and costumes; its director and his staff must be imbued with the loftiest of purposes'—he had belied his words and proved himself a gay deceiver. A smart American manager does not throw away a million dollars or so in this way.

Enough, then, that in addition to erecting a superb house, he has provided the other needful accessories, including a company which, if not rich in 'stars,' comprises some artists of the first rank and not a few who deserve to be better known than they are. Comparisons are not called for—not at present, anyhow. Those familiar but difficult riddles—'Do we really love opera in this country?'—'Can London support more than one first-class opera-house?'—'Can opera on the genuinely "grand" scale be adequately supported without the aid of Society?'—I do not propose to attempt to solve. The time may not be even yet ripe for their solution. I only know that here is an enterprise for which there would appear to be ample room in a city of six or seven million inhabitants, and which, in its very nature and essence, as well as in so much of its fulfilment as has yet been witnessed, eminently deserves the solid support of metropolitan music-lovers. After all, the public has to be tempted where opera is concerned. People can hardly be expected to support 'grand opera' from a mere sense of duty, or simply because it is called 'grand opera.'

But I have an idea that Mr. Hammerstein will tempt the public. At any rate he contrived to do so in New York, when he there started this latest phase of his busy career under conditions not a whit less dubious, less adverse, less problematical, than he is now encountering on this side. He 'made good,' as his compatriots would say, with a judicious mixture of modern French and Italian works,—chiefly French, interpreted by singers practically unknown at the rival house (the Metropolitan), two or three of whom instantly won favour and soon attracted opera-lovers to the Manhattan by the thousand. In a word, the unexpected happened. Who shall say that it will not happen again? On the contrary, recent American history may repeat itself here. Within a short time, by the aid of a big success or two, we may find the Opera House in Kingsway doing splendid business. That such may be the case I believe to be the general wish.

And then what of German opera, of English opera? We shall see. Mr. Hammerstein pins no faith to either. He himself prefers Wagner sung in French (we do not): and he declares that he has yet to find a public that prefers grand opera in English to grand opera sung in a foreign language. He may be right or wrong, but of one thing we feel certain: if his enterprise prospers, he is not the man to ignore a demand for opera in any language that will add to the number of his patrons and regular supporters.

The magnificent new auditorium (which seats 2,300 in the stalls and balconies, and contains fifty-four private boxes) was filled to its utmost capacity on Monday, November 13, the opening night of the twenty weeks' season which inaugurated Mr. Hammerstein's career as a London impresario. The fashionable and artistic circles were well represented, and general admiration was aroused by the broad yet elegant lines of the house, the convenience of the seating arrangements, and the remarkable excellence of the acoustics. Like most other features associated with the undertaking, the opera presented on this occasion was new to this country. Founded upon Sinkiewicz's novel of the same name, written by M. Henri Cain, and composed by M. Jean Nougues, it bears the title of and was given with the following cast:

Lygia ... ..	Mlle. Eva Olchanski.
Eunice ... ..	Mlle. Aline Vallandri.
Poppæa ... ..	Mme. Isabeau Catalan.
Petronius ... ..	M. Maurice Renaud.
Nero ... ..	M. Jean Berkin.
Vinicius ... ..	M. Jean Auber.
Chilo ... ..	M. Figarella.
Peter ... ..	Mr. Francis Combe.
Sporus ... ..	Mr. Arthur Philips.
Demas ... ..	M. Enzo Bozzano.
The Young Nerva ...	M. Fernand Leroux.
Iras ... ..	Mlle. André Kerlane.
Myriam ... ..	Mme. Nina Ratti.

This so-called 'historical' opera, in five acts, was originally produced at Nice on February 10, 1909, and subsequently brought out in Paris (Théâtre Lyrique Municipal) in November of the same year. It holds so far a consistent record of popular success, which the production here seems not unlikely to sustain, in virtue of certain irresistible spectacular attractions that atone for the deficiencies of an otherwise agreeable and melodious score. Grandiose in conception and broad in outline, the drama of 'Quo Vadis?' is undeniably effective; the trouble is that it is rather incoherent and extremely lengthy, though this latter objection has been met already by copious cutting of the second and third acts. A superb series of stage pictures, here carried out under the masterly direction of M. Jacques Coint, embodies the most striking incidents of the novel. These consist, in turn, of the love of the slave, Eunice, for her master, Petronius, and that of the patrician, Vinicius, for the Christian convert, Lygia; of the burning of Rome what time Nero looks on and 'fiddles' for the revellers at his court; of the advent of St. Peter and his message of comfort to the Roman martyrs; of the vast spectacle in the gladiatorial arena, with the massacre of the Christians amid the festal games enacted before the tyrant; and, finally, the suicide of Petronius and Eunice.

The musical setting of 'Quo Vadis?' obviously makes no pretence at ultra-modern characteristics. It reveals M. Jean Nougues as a clever, ingenious craftsman, with a happy gift of appropriate, if not very original melody, and the Frenchman's habitual sense of theatrical fitness. If there is little of Debussy in his score, there is also a welcome absence of Puccini. When suggestions occur they either go back to Gounod and Massenet, or they tread closely on the heels of Bizet and Charpentier. When barbaric splendour is required it is amply forthcoming; the love music is charming; the solemn utterances of St. Peter and the religious ensembles are exceedingly well-written; the choruses are effective, and the orchestration is sufficiently up-to-date. On the whole, then, the music of M. Nougues (who conducted the first two performances) may be said to answer its purpose as a highly-coloured and expressive accompaniment to the events of a highly-romantic melodrama.

Apart from a magnificent mise en scène, Mr. Hammerstein supplied his inaugural opera with an efficient cast of singers, best among whom may be mentioned Mlle. Vallandri, M. Figarella, Mr. Francis Combe, and the talented baritone, M. Maurice Renaud. The chorus is an exceptionally fine one, and the orchestra of fairly good quality.

Rossini's 'William Tell' was mounted on the second night of the season. The opera had not been given in London since 1888, when Augustus Harris revived it at Covent Garden with a cast that included Lassalle (Tell), Edouard de Reszke (Walther), Prévost (Arnold), Marguerite Macintyre (Mathilde), and Bauermeister (Jemmy). That was a remarkably good performance, but in all probability was not recollected by a dozen persons among the audience present at the London Opera House on November 15. Comparing the two representations, I must admit that Mr. Hammerstein came out of the ordeal astonishingly well, but I also confess that portions of 'William Tell' begin to sound the worse for wear. Indeed, it now seems to contain almost as many tedious quarts-d'heure as Rossini himself complained of in the operas of Wagner. Yet a creditable proportion of the possible effect was achieved by the new American tenor, Mr. Orville Harrold, who displayed some superb high notes of the true robust kind as Arnold; while a powerful baritone and broad, dignified style distinguished the Tell of another new-comer, M. José Danse. These two, with Mr. Henry Weldon as Walther, created enthusiasm in the great trio of the second act, and a satisfactory début was made as Mathilde by Mlle. Victoria Fer, a clever and experienced light soprano. Signor Luigi Cherubini conducted.

Two nights later there was a revival of 'Norma.' Bellini's masterpiece was also given by Augustus Harris in the opening week of his opera season at Drury Lane in 1887; but my memory goes back further still—to the 'palmy days' of Tietjens, Sinico, Mongini, and Foli, who sang it there during George Wood's season fifteen years before that. If Mr. Hammerstein possesses no singers of similar calibre it is not his fault; they are either not available, or, likelier still, are not to be found on the operatic stage at the present day. As it was, the exquisite fiorturi of the old Italian score suffered somewhat (especially as the new prima-donna was suffering from a cold), but on the whole fair success attended the efforts of Madame Isabeau Catalan (Norma), Mlle. Vallandri (Adalgisa), Signor Ansaldo (Pollione), and Mr. Henry Weldon (Oroveso). The conductor was Signor Merola.

The programme for the second week consisted of repetitions of the above operas, except on Saturday evening, when 'Rigoletto' was given.

THE ORGAN IN NEWCASTLE CATHEDRAL.

A very important addition to the number of large cathedral organs in this country is now to be found at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and it may at once be said that the builders—Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham and London—have carried their art many steps more towards perfection. The scheme is unusually comprehensive, every department being lavishly equipped. The voicing of the flue and reed stops is, in our opinion, as finely done as is possible, while the action, which is electric throughout, is unflinching in precision and responsiveness.

A very interesting feature is to be seen in the Choir organ, which is divided into two distinct portions, both being played either separately or together from the choir manual. It should be added that the instrument is almost entirely contained in the north transept, the remainder being bracketed over the choir stalls on the north wall of the choir. This latter portion forms what is called the second or chancel division of the Choir organ, and is invaluable for the accompaniment of choral work. The other portion is placed in the main instrument in the transept.

Messrs. Harrison have, of course, embodied practically all the fine pipe-work of Messrs. Lewis's instrument (completed in 1891), the reeds being entirely re-voiced, and fitted with new shallots and tongues throughout. The wind-pressures have been only slightly raised in the Great and Swell flue-work, but considerably increased in the reeds—in some cases more than doubled. The chancel division of the Choir organ is entirely new throughout. The scheme of the Lewis organ has been added to, the Pedal being increased by three stops, the Great by two, the Swell by one, and the Solo by four. The whole of the action is entirely new, and a great improvement is secured by the raising of the sound-boards of the Great, Swell, and Solo organs about 10 feet, the tone being thus directed to better advantage in the cathedral. A beautiful carved oak case (the gift of Mr. N. H. Martin, in memory of his wife) encloses the chancel division of the Choir organ, and is admirably designed to harmonize with the fine choir stalls, which are such a striking feature.

The dedication and re-opening of the organ took place on Sunday, November 5, the Lord Bishop and the Vicar of Newcastle officiating. Sir George Martin played the organ at both morning and evening services, and a recital was given at three o'clock by Mr. J. E. Jeffries, the cathedral organist. The music included an Introit by Mr. Jeffries, a setting of the Service in C by Sir George Martin, the same composer's anthem 'Whoso dwelleth,' and Sir John Stainer's setting of the Evening Canticles in A. In addition to Mr. Jeffries's recital, a series was given in the following order during the ensuing fortnight by Dr. W. G. Alcock, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Mr. J. M. Preston, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, Sir Walter Parratt, and Mr. G. T. Pattman. Each gave two recitals, and their programmes, fully annotated, were of the highest interest, representing all styles from Bach and Handel to Reger and Karg-Elert. Very large congregations attended, and there can be no doubt that the instrument, of which Newcastle is so justly proud, will prove a factor of high value in the musical education of the district. We append the complete specification of the organ.

There are four manuals, CC to C, 61 notes, and two and a half octaves of concave and radiating pedals, CCC to F, 30 notes; 75 speaking stops and 22 couplers, &c., making a total of 97 drawing-stops.

COMBINATION COUPLERS.

- XIX.—Pedal to Choir pistons.
XX.—Great and Pedal combinations coupled.
XXI.—Pedal to Swell pistons.
XXII.—Pedal and accompaniment to Solo pistons.

ACCESSORIES.

Seven combination pedals to the Pedal organ. One patent adjustable pedal to the Pedal organ. Eight combination pistons to the two divisions of the Choir organ. Six combination pistons to the Great organ. Six combination pistons to the Swell organ. Five combination pistons to the Solo organ. Four patent adjustable pistons, one to each manual. Stop switch to the two divisions of the Choir organ. Reversible piston to No. 13. Reversible pedal to Great to Pedal. Reversible piston to Great to Pedal. Reversible piston to Swell to Great. Reversible piston to Solo to Great. Reversible foot piston to Swell tremulant. Reversible foot piston to Solo tremulant. Three balanced crescendo pedals to Choir (Chancel division), Swell, and Solo organs.

WIND PRESSURES.

Pedal flue-work, 3½ inches to 7 inches; reeds, 16 inches. Choir, unclosed division, 3½ inches; enclosed division, 3½ inches. Great flue-work, 3½ inches, 4 inches, and 6 inches; reeds, 12 inches. Swell flue-work, Oboe and Vox Humana, 3½ inches; other reeds, 7 inches. Solo flue-work and orchestral reeds, 6 inches. Tubas, 16 inches. Action, 12 inches.

The draw-stop jambs are at an angle of 45 degrees to the keyboards, and fitted with ivory bushes. The stop-handles have solid ivory heads, the speaking stops being lettered in black, and the couplers, &c., in red. The latter are grouped with the speaking stops of the departments they augment. The combination pistons have solid ivory heads.

The builders' latest system of electro-pneumatic mechanism is applied to all the action except the manual to pedal couplers, which are mechanical.

Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was given recently in Chichester Cathedral by the Cathedral Oratorio Society. The solos and trios were sung by members of the Cathedral choir. The recitation was undertaken by the Rev. C. Howard Muncney, who was very successful in what is certainly a difficult task. His voice was distinctly heard in all parts of the Cathedral. Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, the Cathedral organist, conducted, and Mr. Stephenson, of Birmingham Cathedral, was at the organ. An efficient orchestra lent valuable aid in the accompaniments, and joined with the organ in a performance of Handel's fourth Concerto, by way of a concluding voluntary.

The newly formed Glasgow Southside Society of Organists held their second monthly meeting on November 4. Dr. Frew read an instructive paper on 'Organ accompaniment, and a good many of the members took part in the discussion which followed. Mr. Charles Stewart sang. The Society, of which the membership is now over fifty, is to be congratulated on a very successful meeting, which augurs well for the future.

Two very interesting organ recitals were given in November at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, by Dr. H. W. Richards. Associated with him were the Misses Kate and Mabel Chaplin, who played the viola d'amore and the viola da gamba respectively. These delightful instruments blended admirably with the organ, and music of the 17th and 18th centuries provided a suitable atmosphere. Contrast was afforded by organ music of modern composers, including Saint-Saëns and Karg-Elert.

A recital consisting entirely of works by Liszt, arranged by Mr. W. Deane, in honour of the Liszt Centenary, was given in St. Mary's Parish Hall, Johannesburg, S. Africa, on Wednesday, October 25. The programme included the Introitus, Trauerode, Evocation à la Chapelle Sixtine, Angelus, and March 'Von Fels zum Meer,' for organ. Mrs. Deane played as pianoforte solos, the Concert-study in D flat, the Canzonetta del Salvatore Rosa, and two Consolations; Miss Gladys Browne sang two songs, and St. Mary's Choir contributed the 'March of the Crusaders' from St. Elizabeth, and the beautiful anthem 'Jesu, give Thy servants.' A large number of people were present.

Reviews.

The Philosophy of Music. By H. H. Britan, Mus. D.

[Longmans & Co.]

Like most writers upon this subject, Dr. Britan finds it easier to point out the difficulties of the musical aesthetician's task than to overcome them. He sees, as hundreds before him have done, that the true philosophy of music can be thought out only by someone who is at once philosopher and musician; but he is as far from blending the two in his own person as any of his predecessors. He is, one suspects, much more of a philosopher than a musician. For his knowledge of the history and the technique of the art he appears to rely upon a few of the current text-books, and for his practical experience of it upon the occasional hearing of a number of 'standard works.' This is an insufficient equipment for anyone who would get to the elusive secret of the philosophy of music. Dr. Britan, as might be expected, is constantly getting out of his depth; and hardly anywhere does he give the critical reader the impression of having really seen the subject from the inside. His analytical method would be of some value as a preliminary to a truly synthetic view of all the factors of music; but in itself it is barren. He thinks he can solve the problem by 'a critical analysis of music into its elements and an examination of the effect of these elements taken separately upon the mind. In this way alone can we hope to come to a clear and full understanding of the real nature of music subjectively considered.' One might as well hope to 'come to a clear and full understanding of the real nature' of man by a separate examination of the severed bones and tissues that lie upon the dissecting table. The man is there, but also a good deal more; and what that more is not be revealed by piecemeal analysis of his material constituents. Dr. Britan achieves not a philosophy, but only an anatomy, of music. He examines rhythm, melody and harmony in turn, classifying them (sometimes crudely) as physical, emotional or intellectual in origin and effect; but at the end of it all he has only enumerated the limbs of music,—the soul of it still eludes him. For music is not the mere sum of these elements, but a new creation from them. Dr. Britan quotes approvingly the lines from 'Abt Vogler' in which Browning so finely expresses the wonder of a harmonic triad,—'That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star.' So is it with music as a whole; the various factors of it do not merely co-exist side by side, but are blent into a new something that is as different from each of its constituents as the triad is from each of its notes, or as water from the oxygen and hydrogen that compose it. Dr. Britan is always attributing such-and-such an effect to this one or that of the elements of music. He finds, for example (p. 68), the 'characteristic quality' of the 'Marseillaise' in its rhythm. As a matter of fact it would be easy to write fifty songs in precisely the same rhythm as the 'Marseillaise,' and yet never achieve the emotional effect of that. The truth is that the rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic effects of a given strain of music are not to be isolated in the way Dr. Britan attempts; each suffuses the others and is suffused by them in turns until it is impossible to say where its own field of activity begins or ends.

It is in this 'star' that is born of the blending of the separate elements of music that the real meaning and message of the art lie, and it is for this reason that Dr. Britan's painstaking analysis of the elements one by one leads us nowhere. He rejects colour, too, as one of the fundamental factors of music, because it 'introduces no new psychological element in the musical experience.' That remark simply shows that there are many things in the musical consciousness that Dr. Britan has never understood. Play, for instance, the cor anglais melody of the third act of 'Tristan' on a flute, and again on a trombone, and you will realise how much of the psychological effect of the strain comes from the cor anglais colour that Wagner has given to it. Everywhere, in fact, Dr. Britan's analyses and conclusions will impress the philosophical reader considerably more than the musician. He is obsessed by the idea that 'classical' music (a blessedly vague term!) has a logic that it takes the 'intellect' to appreciate, while the modern tone-poem is merely 'emotional,' and Strauss, for instance, only 'sensuous.' He evidently overrates the difficulty of listening to 'classical' music, and underrates the constructive power—the 'intellectual' power, if he will have it so—of Strauss and other moderns. With this failure to perceive where the problem of musical expression really lies, it is not astonishing that Dr. Britan should fail to provide musical criticism with the scientific data he thinks it needs in order to make it surer and less contradictory. It is all very well to say that a good composition will show this quality and that and the other. We all admit as much. The divergence of opinion comes when different men apply the criteria. Dr. Britan admits that the ultimate test of the value of a piece of music is its 'significance.' But what critical foot-rule can be made that can measure this? The 'significance' of the music to A and to B will vary with their own temperaments, their upbringing, their physical, intellectual, emotional and moral life. Dr. Britan, it must be confessed, does not get far, in spite of his two-hundred-and-fifty pages of conscientious philosophising. He gives an appearance of simplicity to his problems, but that is because he sees them simply. The musician knows that there are a thousand subtleties and perplexities in them that Dr. Britan has never realised.

I was glad when they said unto me. Anthem. By A. Herbert Brewer.

Who are these like stars appearing? Anthem. By Richard Redhead.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Brewer's work may be recommended for its simple and straightforward character. It is suitable for festival or general use, and well within the capabilities of small choirs. An additional advantage is obtained by the accompaniment, as it may be played upon an organ of modest resources with ample effect.

Mr. Richard Redhead's Anthem (revised and edited by Alfred Redhead) will no doubt appeal to choirs capable of some variety of expression. The music is of simple construction, but will be none the less effective on that account, while there is certainly room for more of its kind, for the Festival of All Saints.

Christmas Cantata. Composed by Julius Harrison.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Though the composer has not attempted in this music to probe the depths of the subject, there is much in the cantata which may be commended, and which should secure for it a measure of success among church and other choirs. The carol seems to us to be more spontaneous than many numbers, and if Mr. Harrison would strive to write more naturally, and to temper his desire to be original, he should yet write wholly acceptable music. The words have been arranged and verses, &c., written by Rose Dafforne Betjemann, which happily present the familiar subject in yet another form. There was certainly room for a cantata for the season, and that under notice should meet with acceptance.

The Parish Church Library (a simple congregational setting).
By the Rev. N. A. Bonavia-Hunt.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

There is undoubtedly a demand for this setting, which employs the monotone throughout, the organ supplying the harmonies. We strongly recommend its use in churches with small choirs. The harmonies are suitable and dignified, while the variation of the note for the monotone gives relief and point when necessary.

Four Shakesperian Part-songs. Set for mixed voices (unaccompanied) by Liza Lehmann.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The refined fancifulness of Madame Liza Lehmann's invention is very suitably employed in setting the Shakesperian lyrics. In the present volume she indulges her characteristic tendency towards the pictorial, and in 'When icicles hang by the wall,' even admits such realistic touches as a cough ('When coughing drowns the parson's saw'), and blowing upon the fingers. In 'I know a bank,' she takes her cue from the words 'sleeps' and 'lull'd,' and adopts a dreamy atmosphere. 'Tell me where is fancy bred' is treated in a simple style with an effective 'Ding, dong, bell' ending that would annoy the pundits. 'Under the greenwood tree' is in the vein of a hunting-song. These are no ordinary settings, and with intelligent singing they are bound to 'go down' well with any class of audience.

Introduction and Fugue. In D major. Mozart.
Overture to 'Otho.' Handel.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

These fine works have been arranged for the organ by Dr. W. G. Alcock, and should become well-known, as they lend themselves most happily to organ treatment. Mozart's Prelude and Fugue were arranged years ago by Miss Stirling, but it was felt that an edition in more modern style would be of value. Dr. Alcock's suggested registration should prove effective, and with the several awkward passages the work contains it should attract the student. The music is worthy of its composer, and abounds in contrapuntal device.

Handel's Overture will make a fine recital piece, while it will also serve as an excellent corrective to the 'left-legged' organist (!), the pedal part lying often enough on the 'untrodden way,' viz., the upper part of the pedal board. The Gavotte, which is now placed before the last movement, is well-known, and characteristic of the form.

A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern for 1912.
Compiled by the Rev. Robert Sealy Genge.

[Oxford University Press.]

The Kalendar will save much of the worry and difficulty often experienced by those responsible for the choice of hymns. A strong feature lies in the suitability of the hymns to the Church's teaching for each day. It should find a place in every church where the hymn-book is used.

Correspondence.

PROPOSED MUSICAL ASSOCIATION FOR SHEFFIELD.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—We are discussing the formation of a new musical association for Sheffield, the sole aim of which will be the all-round advancement of music. Thus far have we in Sheffield arrived—the difficulty is to know how to proceed in furtherance of our aim.

We have, by circularizing the conductors and secretaries of local musical Societies, formed a strong and influential organizing committee of twenty-seven members, which includes representation from sixteen Societies—a very large proportion of Sheffield's musical bodies. We now wish to open the membership of the Association to all musical people in Sheffield and within a certain radius around, at a nominal yearly subscription of 2s. 6d. or 4s.

We desire to offer some definite advantage to be derived from membership. We wish to be of assistance and help to each other, and to derive mutual interest and pleasure from social intercourse and cohesion. We wish to unite in some degree the strong efforts which are being made for Sheffield's musical progress. We want to interchange ideas.

But we are determined that our Association—if proceeded with—shall not degenerate into just an ordinary club, because in that case the 'sole aim' with which we set on would be well on the way to being defeated.

We therefore earnestly ask that any existing Society of such description as is here suggested, or any individual member, or indeed anybody who can help us by advice or data in any possible way, will be so kind as to communicate with us at once—either through the correspondence columns of this paper, or directly to the address at the foot of this letter.

We feel that an institution such as is proposed would greatly benefit the musical interests of the community, and anyone giving us useful aid would be worthily helping a laudable cause. Indeed, if we can establish a permanent organization here in Sheffield, there can be no reason why a similar institution should not be formed in many other centres of musical activity in Britain. What a magnificent impetus would be brought to bear upon musical England could such a helpful association be formed in all musical centres of the kingdom!

It has been suggested—as yet only tentatively—that we should commence by the holding of four preliminary meetings, each under the chairmanship of an influential and prominent citizen; each meeting to be open to the whole of the members who join the Association, and each meeting to be devoted to the discussion of vital points. The following subjects of discussion have been suggested: (1) 'In what ways is it possible to place a musical Society upon a sound financial basis?' (2) 'In what manner is it possible still farther to enhance the good musical results of Societies' efforts?' (3) 'In what ways is it possible for our Association to be of assistance to musical people—professional and amateur—who are not attached to any musical Society?' (4) 'Musical grievances—their cause and possible amelioration.'

Meanwhile a series of lectures by eminent specialists on musical matters is to be arranged. Social evenings (with formal or informal music) would also probably form a portion of our scheme.

Again we sincerely and earnestly ask for help from all who can give assistance.—I remain, Dear sir, on behalf of the Proposed Musical Association, Yours very faithfully,

JOHN H. PARKES.
Hon. Sec. (pro tem.).

LISZT AS A BOY.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—Apropos the Liszt Centenary and the valuable articles in your paper upon it, it may interest readers of the Musical Times to know that I have in my possession a copy of The Harmonicon for June, 1823, which contains the first notice of Liszt in the English musical Press. Here it is: 'A prodigy has lately sprung up in Germany in the person of Franz Liszt, a boy of only eleven years of age, whose wonderful powers as a pianoforte player are mentioned in a very recent letter from Vienna, communicated to us by a correspondent, in the following terms: "On Sunday, April 13, the Hungarian boy, Franz Liszt, eleven years old, gave at noon a concert, which was very well attended. He performed three times during the morning. His chief piece was Hummel's Concerto in B Minor, one of the most difficult compositions extant, which he played with so much precision, correctness and execution, united to such tastes and elegances, that he is already placed side by side of the greatest pianoforte players of the present day. As to physical powers of hands, his leaves us nothing to wish for; and he indeed seems destined to attain the highest rank in the art."'

The writer obviously was at once a discerning critic and a true prophet.—Yours truly,

WILLIAM PEARSON.

ACCRINGTON CLEF CLUB.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I notice that mention has recently been made in your columns to our little village of Oswaldtwistle in Lancashire and its musical attainments. It may be interesting to relate to you that in this district of Oswaldtwistle, Church, and Accrington, we have what is known as the 'Accrington Clef Club' illustrated as which holds its meetings once or twice monthly. These meetings are devoted solely to the best chamber music, both vocal and instrumental, of ancient and modern composers. In connection with the Club there is an excellent string quartet. We have several members whose compositions often appear on the programmes.

In 1903 we started with sixteen members, which we now call the original sixteen, these having power to make new rules in regard to the Club.

At the annual meeting, September 21, a committee of five are re-elected with a secretary and president, the latter being generally a person of some high musical standing.

I may add that through one of our old Father Musicians, Mr. R. W. Kenyon, another musical club, which is also in a progressive stage, was formed at Keighley.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT TOMLINSON.

'HOW IMPERFECT IS EXPRESSION.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—With reference to the letter from Dr. Gratton Flood, printed in your November issue: although E. R. James, of Dublin, and McGown, of Glasgow, issued sheet songs of the above tune and song as 'composed by Dibdin,' there was not the slightest justification for it. Dibdin never claimed either tune or words, and it does not appear in any collected edition of his works. It is significant also that in numerous contemporary flute-books the air is expressly designated as 'French.'

What is evidently the original English publication now lies before me. Its title runs:

'The new song in the pantomime of The Witches . . . to which are added the new comic tunes in the Witches, and a favourite French Air, sung in the comedy of Twelfth Night; by Mrs. Abington . . . London, John Johnston, near Exeter Change, in the Strand.' Folio, c. 1772.

On the second page of this are the words and music of the song 'How imperfect is expression,' with the heading 'The French Air in Twelfth Night, sung by Mrs. Abington, the words translated from the French by M. Kelly, Esq.' Underneath is: 'The original words to the above air by the Duke of Orleans.' These begin:

'D'une manière imparfaite
Je vous dirai mon ardeur,' &c.

In Fielding's 'Vocal Enchantress,' 1783, this song and air and the French words are also reprinted, apparently from the above work. I think there can be no doubt about its French origin, and the air has practically nothing of Dibdin's characteristics.

The 'M. Kelly' who translated the words cannot, of course, be Michael Kelly, the composer, who was only born in 1762.

It is interesting to note that the other chime tune is also French (as pointed out by Mr. Arkwright), and occurring in the opera 'The Haunted Tower,' produced in 1789. It may be also noticed that this tune became so popular as a dance as to be called 'The Haunted Tower,' being apparently one of the most popular in that opera. In J. Dale's 'New instructions for playing the harpsichord, piano-forte, or organ,' c. 1795-1800, the air is present and named 'Le Plaisir de L'été' or 'The Haunted Tower.' Whatever the parish books fail to chronicle, I think there can be no question that the above-named tunes cannot have been placed on the chime-barrel much prior to 1775-80.

THE DRESDEN AMEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Mr. F. J. W. Crowe has been good enough to send me a copy of 'The Ancient Plain Chant and Daily Choral Use of the Cathedral Church of Chichester, arranged and harmonized by Thomas Bennett, organist,' containing a further arrangement of the Dresden Amen, as follows:

with this explanatory paragraph: 'The famous "Dresden" Amen, now (1909) used at Chichester Cathedral, is added. It is given in the form in which it has been sung in the State Church, Dresden, ever since circa 1500, which has been taken down by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, with the assurance of the organist at that church that it is the ancient version.'

Yours faithfully,

CECIL BARBER.

[An article on the Dresden Amen, by Mr. Cecil Barber, appeared in our November issue.—ED. M.T.]

THE DATE OF THOMAS BRITTEN'S BIRTH.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I have found the following in addition to the information given in my letter of last month:

1610. xxv. day of October Rychard Brittainye & Elizabeth BEEBYE married in the YERE above written.

1624. The xxvth day of November Richard Britten and JOANE MAPLEY was married.

1652. [?] day
Elizabeth the daughter of John Britten baptized in the year above written.

[All from the Parish Church Register,
Rushden, Northants.]

These names may lead to much, for they show that the family name existed about Thomas Britton's time. The spelling of a name is of no great account.

Yours truly,

JOSEPH ENOS SMITH.

SCIENCE AND SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—It is difficult to understand, in the face of your excellent criticism of Mr. White's extraordinary book, how he can persist in saying that the vocal cords do not produce sound. His deductions from the paragraph in 'A system of Operative Surgery,' are simply preposterous. It is clear that the reference is not to the singing-voice; and even as regards the speaking-voice, how can it be 'practically normal' when 'rough and reduced in volume and range?' But what can one expect from the author of the following extract from page 60 in 'Science and Singing'!

'Watch closely that the vowel e is not drawn into the sound i; for instance Li-ght is frequently sung Li-ght. In order to avoid the two vowel sounds the mouth must be kept in exactly the same position for the second note as for the first. It will be noticed that the "Li-light" is produced by the gradual closing of the mouth' (the italics are mine.—C.C.), which, of course, is wrong. As a matter of fact, the alteration is caused by the movement of the tongue, and has nothing to do with the closing of the mouth. Mr. White, or anyone, can try the experiment by singing the word with a small gag between the teeth.

I wonder if Mr. White has yet made that dead cock crow to which he referred in his challenge to your critic. He did not accept my invitation to perform the feat at my lecture at Cripplegate Institute on November 7 of last year, although I provided the bird and had a leading surgeon in attendance to remove the vocal cords.

CLIFTON COOKE.

PORTRAIT OF GIUGLINI.

Mr. Sydney H. Pardon (address c/o Editor, Musical Times, 160, Wardour Street) would be glad to know whether any readers of the Musical Times could assist him to obtain a portrait of the singer Giuglini in ordinary costume.

Obituary.

We regret to have to record the following deaths:—

Mr. JOHN TOZER, at Heavitree, Exeter, on October 24, at the age of eighty-two. He had been for upwards of forty-seven years a member of the Exeter Cathedral choir. In the 'sixties and 'seventies he was conductor of two or three church choral festival societies, and was to a large extent responsible for the improvement in village choral singing in the neighbourhood of Exeter. Mr. Tozer was musical instructor on board H.M.S. 'Britannia,' Dartmouth, at the time when the present King and the late Duke of Clarence were naval cadets there. He leaves several children, among whom are Mrs. Mairs, organist of the Exeter City Asylum; Mrs. Barrett, assistant-organist of Heavitree Church; and Dr. Ferris Tozer.

EDWARD BROADBRIDGE (Alderman), at Brighton, on November 1, aged eighty-two. He was a chorister at the memorial service on the death of King William IV. In his later life he was well-known as a tenor singer.

Prof. ARTHUR SMOLIAN, the well-known musical journalist, who died suddenly from the effects of a stroke on November 5. He was born in Riga in 1856.

ROBERT MALONE, aged sixty, organist of Carlow Parish Church. He had been an organist for forty-two years.

It is proposed to hold a short Christmas holiday session of the Stratford-upon-Avon School of Folk-song and Dance, that was so successfully inaugurated under Mr. Cecil Sharp's direction during the summer. It is to be held from December 28 to January 6, inclusive. Students may enter for the whole session at a fee of £1 5s. 0d., or for as many days as they please at 3s. 6d. per day. Information respecting local arrangements may be obtained from the Secretary, Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, Stratford-upon-Avon. The session will not be held unless thirty applications (to Miss Rainbow, Shakespeare Memorial Theatre) have been received by December 11.

FIRST MUSICAL FESTIVAL OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

A portion of the Western United States having happily been included in the itinerary, our British singers were thus enabled to appreciate the warm and true hearted fellowship meted out to them by their American cousins. Nowhere perhaps on their journeyings around the world was their welcome more sincere than in the States of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At Cincinnati, justly renowned for its Festivals, a stay was made for three days, the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokovski, joining forces with the Sheffield Choir. For the first time here a splendid performance was given of Verdi's Requiem, under Herr Stokovski. Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony, Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Harris's 'Pan,' together with Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord' and other unaccompanied items under Dr. Coward's guidance, formed the programme. Sir Edward Elgar and Dr. Harris conducted their own compositions. In the main these works were also drawn upon for the Festivals held in Indianapolis, Chicago, and St. Paul. At Chicago the amalgamation was made with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, whose conductor, Mr. Frederick Stock, shared with Sir Edward Elgar and Dr. Coward the duties of conductor. From the 'Windy-City' Dr. Harris had to beat a hasty retreat and travel to London to direct the opening concert of the Festival of Empire and Pageant of London at the Crystal Palace, where he had the honour of introducing his newly-formed Imperial Choir in the presence of Their Majesties The King and Queen on that memorable day of May 12.

The St. Paul Festivals were given in conjunction with the Symphony Orchestra of that city, their conductor, Mr. Walter H. Rothwell, taking a prominent part.

Sir Edward Elgar left for home after directing a fine performance of 'Gerontius' at St. Paul. The famous Apollo Club of Milwaukee joined the Sheffield singers in the concert here, and the combined choirs were aroused to a fine effort by the Milwaukee Society's conductor, Mr. Daniel Protheroe. It is interesting to note that at Waterloo, Iowa, the Mayor of the city declared a public holiday to banks and schools on the day of the concerts.

We must now hark forward to May 19, on which day the S.S. 'Zealandia' set sail from Victoria, B.C., for Sydney, Australia.—Dr. Harris meanwhile having left London for the same objective on the night of the Festival of Empire concert, May 12. En route to Sydney, N.S.W., concerts were given at Honolulu, Hawaii; Suva, Fiji Islands; and Brisbane, Queensland.

Sydney being reached on Monday, June 12, the Festivals commenced the following day in Sydney Town Hall, and extended from June 13 to June 21. Performances were given of 'The Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Gerontius,' 'The Golden Legend,' the 'Choral' Symphony, 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'Sing ye to the Lord' and 'Pan'; two miscellaneous concerts of unaccompanied works, the Empire concert, and a farewell open-air concert in the Market Square, the latter given by Dr. Harris as a slight return for the kind hospitality bestowed upon the visiting Choir during their happy stay in Sydney. It was estimated by the Press that a huge audience of 20,000 assembled in the open to hear our Britons sing.

The great welcome given on the arrival of the ship at Sydney, sufficed to fill eight columns of the Sydney Daily Telegraph on June 13. We regret that we have not space to reprint the whole report of the great demonstration, but the following extract is significant:

'People may say what they will about the relations existing between the colonies and the Mother-country; people may say what they will about political relationships of one sort and another, but while scenes like that which was enacted yesterday afternoon at the Orient Company's wharf are possible, whilst strong men can feel the chest tighten, the lip quiver—whilst Acting-Premiers can take off their hats and cheer the sight of a few visitors from afar, as one Acting-Premier—let it be said to his great credit—did, with hundreds of less-distinguished folk, it is impossible for men to argue that sentiment is dead, and that the dream of a great united

English-speaking race is gone. For, after all, what was it that brought men and women out in their thousands? Was it the prospect of seeing a few people who happen to be possessed of better voices than the average? Was it to see a man whose reputation is world-wide as the manipulator of a conductor's bâton? Had the Sheffield Choir not come, to-day would have dawned exactly as it did. Australia will maintain the even tenor of her way long after the sweet melodies of a great musical combination had passed away. But the warmth of that welcome, the open-hearted receiving of the men and women from the home into the colony, would last whilst even memory is there. There was, below the veneer, something that meant, something that showed Dr. Harriss to have struck a right note when he said that he wanted to forge the bonds of Empire more tightly and more firmly than ever before. It would be difficult to say who were the most impressed by what happened. The visitors were unable to describe their feelings. The intensity and the warmth of it all burst upon them with all the effect of a great transformation. They will not forget—and there were tears in the eyes of some of those old Sheffield-Australians as they looked and heard, and waved. For an hour there was abroad that spirit which does things, which conquers, which makes empires. Regarded in the coldest blood, a few words might suffice to tell the whole story. But it was a thrilling hour, worth far more than mere superficial attention.

The First Musical Festival of the Empire, which made possible the visit of the Sheffield Choir to Australia, was history making if for no other reason than that it led to the first performance of Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony in Sydney. This was accomplished by the co-operation of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra. Fine performances of the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, and the Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra No. 4, in G major, with Mr. Kelly as soloist, were chronicled. The Concerto was given also for the first time in Sydney. The gifted Australian pianist was afforded a great demonstration at the close for his masterful and satisfying interpretation. These works were conducted by Mr. Bradley, who, it will be remembered, vacated the position of conductor of the Glasgow Choral Union for the dual position of conductor of the Sydney Philharmonic and Sydney Symphony Orchestral Societies. It is needless to say that Mr. Bradley made the most of his opportunities on this particular occasion. Further evidences of the 'Reciprocity-movement' were seen in the massed choirs of the Sydney Philharmonic and Sheffield Choir in the 'Elijah' performance given under Dr. Coward; in the Empire Concert given with the massed choirs of Mr. Orchard's 'Liedertafel' Society, Madrigal Society, and the Sheffield singers—Mr. Orchard and Dr. Harriss conducting; and in the able services rendered by Herr Słapowski's Festival Orchestra of sixty players, who bore the brunt of the Sydney Festivals proper, excepting that of the Beethoven concert aforesaid.

At 5.30 in the afternoon of June 21, amid cheers and singing of thousands congregated on the wharf, the S.S. 'Wimmera' left Sydney for Auckland, New Zealand, with a very heavy list of passengers. Some of these intra-colonial vessels, built to meet the every-day wants of their own every-day travelling public, do not usually expect the sudden onrush of two hundred and twenty-four 'extras,' hail as they may even from the 'tight-little-Isle'; consequently—without any beating about the bush—it was an inconveniently-crowded ship that encountered the worst storm at sea experienced in those parts during seventeen years. On the night of the Coronation of our beloved King and Queen, singers who were physically able to do so foregathered in the saloon, and sang 'God save the King' to the terrifying accompaniment of breaking crockery from within and the crashing of mighty waves without. Thankful hearts sang the Master's praise in hymns of thanksgiving when on Sunday the North Cape of New Zealand loomed on the horizon. The success of the Festivals in New Zealand, from June 26 to July 10, created a record; the hospitality of the inhabitants throughout the Dominion, and of the Government, spelt 'open sesame' to the cultured homes of New Zealanders, from the North to the South Island, and throughout their stay, the British visitors were the privileged guests of private citizens everywhere. The works drawn upon for the Festivals in Auckland and elsewhere in New Zealand, were 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'Sing ye to the Lord,' 'Elijah,' 'Pan,' the Empire Concert programme, and numerous unaccompanied glees, madrigals, and part-songs by British composers of ancient and modern time. The orchestra of fifty musicians were recruited from all over the Island, some instrumentalists coming from as far distant as 1,500 miles. At Auckland, one week before the Festivals commenced, the orchestra was effectively rehearsed by Mr. Johann Wielert, a very able and enthusiastic orchestral conductor. The excellence of this body of players was highly commented upon; their intelligence, earnest endeavour, and honest work contributed greatly to the success of the performances. This applies equally to Dr. W. E. Thomas, the conductor of the Auckland Auxiliary Festival Chorus. No less untiring in his efforts for the cause was Mr. H. Brett, whose recent munificent bequest of £6,000 to build an organ for the City Hall is an historic event in Auckland.

Three days were spent at Wellington, the capital of the Dominion, where the welcome by the Mayor and an invitation to the Government House, from His Excellency Lord Islington, gladdened the hearts of the visitors. The Royal Choral Society of this city, so ably directed by Mr. Maughan Barnett, added materially to the success of the Festivals. Three days in the beautiful 'Garden City' of Christchurch brought into requisition the excellent choral elements under Dr. Bradshaw's able training. During the stay in Christchurch, Dr. Harriss contributed £250 towards the Coronation fund of the prospective Consumptive Home. Dunedin was the next port of call where the auxiliary Festival Chorus was recruited from the local Societies conducted by Messrs. Coombs, Timson and Wolf. Dunedin's Scottish inhabitants rolled up in large numbers to the feast of song. With two days respectively at the agricultural centre of Palmerston North, and at the important export town of Invercargill, the visit to one of the loveliest dominions of the British Empire came to a close.

Fine weather favoured the sea trip from New Zealand to Tasmania on board the S.S. 'Manuka,' but the travellers had only time for a fleeting impression of the beauties and importance of Hobart, its capital, and the hospitality and enthusiasm of its populace, headed by the Acting-Premier, The Hon. A. Hearn, before setting sail, on the day of the concert, for Melbourne. The visit to the capital of Victoria was of course one of the outstanding features of the whole tour. Nine concerts were held in this city, July 15 to 22, the works given being 'Gerontius' (twice), 'The Messiah,' 'The Choral Symphony,' 'Elijah,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' 'The Golden Legend,' 'Pan,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'Sing ye to the Lord,' and several miscellaneous and Empire programmes. The choral forces of Melbourne joining hands with the British singers were Professor Beard's Victoria Festival Chorus, the Philharmonic Society conducted by Mr. George Peake, and Mrs. Peterson's Ladies' Festival Chorus. The volume of tone from these combined elements, especially in the massed 'Elijah' performance, was most impressive and inspiring. The members of the Festival Orchestra, so ably trained by Mr. Dawson, merited by their spirited and devoted work warm words of praise from Dr. Coward and Dr. Harriss. During the week, receptions were given in honour of the home visitors by the Lord Mayor Councillor T. J. Davey; Dr. Barrett, C.M.G.; Mrs. Albert Millar; Sir Samue Gillot; Mrs. J. W. Chadwick, and Mrs. Robert Harper; and luncheons were given by the Governor, Sir John Fuller, and by the Acting-Premier, the Hon. W. M. Hughes. Presentations were made to Dr. Harriss and Dr. Coward by Mrs. Peterson's Ladies' Festival Chorus and the Melbourne Festival Orchestra. Another incident of this memorable occasion was the visit to H.M.S. 'Powerful,' by invitation of Vice-Admiral Sir George King-Hall, K.C.B. Dr. Harriss gave £100 towards the building fund of Professor Marshall Hall's new Conservatory of Music at Melbourne. Two concerts were given in Ballarat, the historic 'gold camp' of Victoria; receptions by the Mayor and Presidents of three important musical societies were tendered. The specially chartered S.S. 'Moravian' left Melbourne for Adelaide on July 24, where Festivals took place on July 26, 27, and 28, the Bach Choir, the Adelaide Choral Society, and instrumentalists of the city, under Dr. Harold Davies, contributing greatly to the success. Nothing seemed to have been overlooked in the effort to give the musical guests a good time in Adelaide: a Government reception one day, a Government picnic to National Park amongst the 'Wattles' (the national flower of the country); and a dinner at Parliament House being only a few incidents of kindness met with ere Dr. Harriss's Empire voyageurs set sail for West Australia. The Australian Bight was crossed, Fremantle was reached, and two concerts given at Perth on August 3, to very crowded and most appreciative audiences. It was greatly to be deplored that time did not permit a longer sojourn in this tempting portion of the British Empire—tempting for the reason that Perth is a thriving up-to-date city with a live people and a live government, determined to show the world what they have, and share it with all who care to try their fortune in this fertile land of West Australia.

After a most pleasant voyage of seventeen days across the Indian Ocean, the S.S. 'Moravian' entered the harbour at Durban, Natal's busy and beautiful port. On August 21, 22, and 23, the inauguration of the series of South African Festivals began. The Concert Hall here is one of the finest in the world; it is a part of the Durban City Hall, the building of which cost £350,000 and is easily one of the most imposing public buildings in all of the Overseas Dominions. In this hall is a fine organ. The city organist, Mr. Frank Proudman, is doing admirable work, as was exemplified by the really excellent singing of his Choral Society which, with the Durban Orchestra, took part in the 'Elijah' performance and Empire Concert in conjunction with the Home-singers. 'The Dream of Gerontius' received its first hearing at these Festivals in South Africa.

Receptions by Mayor Hollander, the Municipality, Chamber of Commerce, and a civic luncheon and garden party, were pleasant incidents of the three days' stay. The same hospitality from the civic and commercial authorities was extended at Pietermaritzburg. Here, on August 24, a miscellaneous concert was given in the City Hall, which possesses a fine concert auditorium and a four-manual organ by Brindley & Foster, of Sheffield. The Mayor of Pretoria, Sir J. van Boeschoten, held a reception for the visitors to meet His Excellency Lord Gladstone, Governor-General of South Africa, Lord and Lady Methuen, and General Sir Ian Hamilton. Three concerts were held here, the programmes being miscellaneous. From August 26 to 31, Johannesburg held the fortnight with performances of 'The Messiah,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'Sing ye to the Lord,' 'Pan,' 'Elijah' (with massed choruses of the Johannesburg Philharmonic Society and the Sheffielders), the Empire Concert, a miscellaneous concert, and a most interesting children's concert, given in the Wanderers' Grounds before some 5,000 to 6,000 bright and highly delighted little ones who, when asked by Dr. Harriss to cheer and wave their hats and 'kerchiefs' for the King, did so to their hearts' content, time and time again. It was an inspiring sight to see these happy children—the rising generation of a coming great country—so ready and enthusiastic. For six days the Sheffield Choir were the guests of the city. A civic reception, garden party, and afternoon 'At Home' were given by Mayor H. J. Hofmeyer; visits to the Mines, where the party went under-ground and became conversant with the 'Simon-Pure' in the city of gold; a great Kaffir war dance, given by the directors of the 'Robinson Deep'; and the 'At Home' given by the Rand Daily Mail and Sunday Times, were amongst the numerous functions provided. Dr. Harriss, before leaving, established two singing scholarships for open competition amongst amateur vocalists of Johannesburg. On arrival at Bloemfontein, the travellers were welcomed by the Mayor and civic corporation, and a performance of the 'Messiah' and a miscellaneous concert were given on September 2 and 3.

From the 'eighty miles of gold reef of the rand' to the diamond fields of Kimberley the dial hand of the itinerary pointed 'onward march,' and on September 4 our Sheffield singers feasted their eyes—by kind permission of the De Beers directors—on the Company's priceless holdings. Diamonds here, diamonds there, diamonds everywhere, but none to take away (for they safely rested in the strong rooms of the Consolidated Company).

The concerts here were given to crowded audiences on September 4 and 5. The Diamond Fields Musical and Orchestral Society, jointly conducted by Mr. Ashworth and Mr. Rees, joined in the Empire Concert with much credit. The civic reception at the Town Hall by Mayor Gasson and councillors, members of the Chamber of Commerce, and the garden party at Alexandersfontein Park, the dance given by the members of the Musical Society at the Town Hall, together with the private hospitality extended to the Choir by the citizens and De Beers directors, were among the plentiful examples of the extreme kindness shown. Dr. Harriss gave £100 towards purchasing concert organ for the Kimberley City Hall, supplemented later by a vote of £1,000 from the Corporation. The Festival special train of sixteen coaches and two engines, the longest passenger train ever run through South Africa, pulled out of Kimberley at 2 a.m., September 6, reaching Cape Town on the morning of the 7th. The route overland from Durban to the Cape is, roughly speaking, 1,500 miles. Here the final stand in this epoch-making Festival of the British Empire occurred. Dr. Barrow Dowling had his choral and orchestral forces ready, and right worthily did they acquit themselves. The far concluding concerts given in the mother city of United South Africa, on September 7, 8, and 9, proved a brilliant and auspicious ending to the great musical tour of Greater Britain. The fitting final act to the signal drama of British hospitality also witnessed a splendid civic reception at the City Hall given by the Mayor, Sir Frederick Smith; an outing to Camps Bay; a dance given by the Festival Choral Association; a motor ride to Houts Bay; a luncheon at Groots Constantia; a civic garden party at the Botanical Gardens, and a visit to 'Groote Schuur,' the home of the world-famed Empire builder, Cecil Rhodes.

On Sunday, September 10, the day of departure for England, a thanksgiving service was conducted by His Grace Archbishop Carter in the Market Square, opposite King Edward's monument, where the Choir sang selections from the 'Messiah' in the presence of nearly 20,000 people forming a scene which defies description for its very impressiveness and solemnity, and which will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. On September 30, the S.S. 'Marathon' steamed into Plymouth with the musical travellers of Empire singing with fervour the National Anthem.

Dr. Henry Coward, who undertook the greater part of the burden of conducting throughout the tour, it is needless to say upheld the renown for which his famous Choir is so justly celebrated, whilst considerably enhancing his own distinguished reputation.

Dr. Harriss tells us that for the success of this world undertaking he feels greatly indebted to Earl Grey, Ex-Governor-General of Canada, who very largely contributed by his kindly encouragement and influence in every way; also to the Earl of Minto, who strongly supported the movement in its early days; and to Their Excellencies The Earl of Dudley, Lord Islington and Viscount Gladstone, respectively Governors-General of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, for their kind support and personal interest in the scheme.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

The thirty-eighth session opened with a meeting at Messrs. Broadwood's rooms on November 7, when Mr. George Langley read a paper on 'Musical expression from the performer's point of view.' He dealt with the broadly emotional and intellectual, rather than the technical elements of expression, and in a manner that testified to original thought and research. An important feature of his remarks, was the emphasis laid upon the distinction between depth of emotion and emotional excitement, and between coldness and intellectually-tempered emotion. An interesting discussion followed, in which the chairman, Dr. Cummings, took part.

The annual dinner was held on the same day at the Trocadero Restaurant. Mr. W. W. Cobbett gave the toast of 'The Musical Association,' to which Dr. Cummings replied. Other speakers were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Southgate, Mr. E. Howard-Jones, and Mr. Alderman Cooper. Musical entertainment was supplied by students of the Guildhall School of Music.

THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS.

Many members and guests of the Worshipful Company of Musicians dined at Stationers' Hall on October 24. After the customary loyal toasts, Sir Frederick Bridge referred with deep feeling to the recent decease of the Chaplain of the Company, Canon Duckworth. At the conclusion of his remarks Elgar's beautiful dirge for strings was played, the company meanwhile standing. Mr. Alfred Littleton, the

Mr. Arthur Hill, after thanking his fellow-liverymen for the honour they had done him, said he had always thought that any movement, if properly conducted, could be directed to some good and useful purpose, and, with this conviction, he had always striven to advance the interests of their Guild.

Twenty years had elapsed since he had the good fortune to be made a citizen of London and a liveryman of the Musicians' Company, and during these years many changes had taken place, the chief being the great increase in their numbers, which had more than trebled. Members had been drawn from their ranks to serve on the committee of the Royal Academy of Music, their Past-Master, Mr. Alderman Cooper, was its Chairman, and Mr. Rube its Treasurer. Others again, were members of the Council of the Royal College of Music: in fact, there was hardly any movement of interest connected with music and musicians in which some of their members were not associated. He alluded to the part taken by the retiring Master, Mr. Alfred Littleton, in connection with the Congress of the International Musical Society. But for Mr. Littleton's efforts in providing the sinews of war, the gathering could not have been held. Members of their Company alone guaranteed upwards of three thousand pounds towards the expenses of this Congress. They could claim to-day, more than at any other time during the last two centuries, to be a Company of musicians. He then referred to the plate given to the Company by Mr. Charles Rube, and the cup given by Mr. Meade Falkner, and went on to remark that in the Will of Hen. Walker, the musician from whom Shakespeare bought his house in Blackfriars, he found that the Company, in 1616, was given a piece of plate. From that he hoped to be able to prove that Shakespeare himself was also a member of the Guild, for the stage and music had always been closely connected. There being no records of that period, he turned to the City Roll of Freeman, but he found that it had been destroyed by a fire which took place in the City Chamberlain's Office in 1786. There also seemed to be no possibility of learning what eventually became of Walker's gift, which had completely immediate Past-Master of the Company, expressed his thanks to the many kind friends who had enabled him to carry on his duties so happily. Many important events in connection with music in England had happened during the year, the most important of which was the Meeting of the International Congress in London. The performances given in connection with the event proved that British music was qualified to rank with the music of any other country. The Congress had, besides, been a great social success, to which the Lord Mayor of London had greatly contributed in various ways, and especially by his chairmanship and his felicitous speech at the final banquet given at the Savoy Hotel. He asked them to drink the health of the new Master, Mr. Arthur F. Hill, in the admiration of whose sterling qualities he yielded to no one. Mr. Hill's enthusiasm had been of enormous service to the Company, and the past was a foretaste of what they might expect during the coming year. Mr. Hill was a student of literature and of historical research. He could trace his history back for three centuries to worthy forbears in the art of instrument-making.

disappeared. He would be better pleased to be able to trace the name of Shakespeare as having been one of their liverymen, than even to find the long-missing piece of Jacobean plate. Possibly the plate was melted, to help the unfortunate King Charles, for musicians had ever been first and foremost in alleviating the misfortunes of others.

Sir Homewood Crawford proposed the health of the Lord Mayor (The Rt. Hon. Sir T. Vezev Strong), who had been made an honorary freeman of the company. 'For he 's a jolly good fellow' was then sung, with some disregard of time and tune, in fact it became an impossible canon two in one at the second below. The Lord Mayor made a very happy and humorous speech in acknowledging the toast. He thanked the Company for the great honour they had done him. They had admitted him to a coveted position without testing his musical capacity; but after the performance he had just been treated to, which exemplified so much British independence, he was greatly encouraged. Still, he felt like the very plain man who went to have his portrait taken, and asked the photographer to be sure to do him justice. 'My dear sir, said the operator, 'it is not justice you want, but mercy.' He was glad to note that the Musicians' Company was a progressive body. It had a proud inheritance, and its mission was to show to generations yet unborn the ever-widening influence of the art.

Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, Prof. Wagstaff, Alderman Cooper, and the Earl of Malmesbury also spoke.

Selections of music were performed by students of the Royal Military School of Music, and by Miss Lily Fairney, Mr. Percy Heming, Mr. Willie Davies, and Mr. Vivian Langrish, from the Royal Academy of Music.

The silver medals of the Company were presented to Bandmaster Vitou, Royal Naval School of Music; Student Charles E. Richardson (2nd King's Own Regiment), Royal Military School of Music; and to Sir A. C. Mackenzie, on behalf of Miss Olive Turner, Royal Academy of Music.

On November 22, St. Cecilia's Day, in accordance with custom, the Master, Wardens, and Livery of the Company attended a service in St. Paul's Cathedral. A processional hymn, written for the occasion by the Rev. Bernard Reynolds (Prebendary of St. Paul's) and set by Sir George Martin, was sung, and the other music included 'Magnificat' and 'Nunc dimittis' in A (Stanford), 'The Wilderness' (Wesley), and the hymn, 'Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him.'

At the recent Court of the Company it was decided to present the Company's medal to Dr. Charles Harriss, in recognition of his services rendered to British music in connection with the world musical tour recently so successfully accomplished.

THE LIVERY CLUB OF THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

On the evening of St. Cecilia's Day, November 22, about 100 members and guests of the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians dined at the Skinners' Hall, which was generously lent by the Skinners' Company for the occasion. Mr. Alderman Cooper, the president of the Club, occupied the chair. He called upon The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) to propose the toast 'To music.' In the course of a charming speech his lordship recited the following poem in French from memory, although he had not seen it for years:

L'AGONIE.

Vous qui m'aidez dans mon agonie,
Ne me dites rien :
Faites que j'entende un peu d'harmonie,
Et je mourrai bien !
La musique apaise, enchante, et délire
Des choses d'en bas ;
Bercez ma douleur, je vous en supplie,
Ne lui parlez pas ;
Je suis las des mots, je suis las d'entendre
Ce qui peut mentir :
J'aime mieux les sons qu'au lieu de comprendre
Je n'ai qu'à sentir.
Une mélodie, où l'âme se plonge,
Et qui, sans effort,
Me fera passer du délire au songe,
Du songe à la mort.

Sully Prud'homme.

Sir Ernest Clarke responded to the toast, and made a very amusing speech. The health of the visitors was proposed by the president and responded to by Mr. T. L. Devitt, Past-Master of the Skinners' Company. He said that although he was regarded as a visitor on this occasion, he welcomed the Musicians' Company to the Hall, and he felt sure that his Company would be glad to house them again.

The Skinners' Company not only lent their fine hall, but they displayed to the wondering gaze of the visitors their magnificent plate.

The beautifully-printed programme-book contained much matter of interest. Among the happy quotations to be found in it none was more apt to the occasion than the following from Ecclesiasticus:

'If thou be made the master (of a feast), lift not thyself up, but be among them as one of the rest; take diligent care for them, and so sit down.'

'And when thou hast done all thy office, take thy place, that thou mayest be merry with them, and receive a crown for thy well ordering of the feast.'

'Speak, thou that art the elder, for it becometh thee, but with sound judgment; and hinder not music. For not out words where there is a musician, and shew not forth wisdom out of time. A concert of music in a banquet of wine is as a signet of carbuncle set in gold. As a signet of an emerald set in a work of gold, so is the melody of music with pleasant wine.'

'Welcome' ... .. Dr. Blow.

'Magnificat' ... .. Cornelius Verdonck.

Ode to St. Cecilia, Dr. Maurice Greene, 1695-1755.

And the Overture to the 2nd part of Dr. Boyce's 'Ode to St. Cecilia'

The programme-book contained interesting notes by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer and Mr. R. E. Brandt on the music performed, and gave a beautiful reproduction of a rare engraving by John Sadler, after Marten de Vos. This engraving includes the musical notation of the Verdonck 'Magnificat,' and it was from copies made from this source by Mr. Stainer that the performance was given. Mr. Arthur Hill, the Master, was responsible for the resuscitation of Dr. Greene's Ode, as he was for much else in connection with the programme.

The following were the singers:—Miss Gladys Honey, Miss Alice Hare, Miss Lily Fairney, Mr. Roland Jackson, and Mr. George Baker. 'The Band of Musick' was led by Mr. John Saunders, and the conductor was Mr. Lennox Clayton.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

One of the best performances given in recent years by the Royal Choral Society was that of 'Elijah,' with which its present season opened on October 2. An unusually bright spirit seemed to pervade the singing in its attack, its expression, and the building up of its climaxes. The hugeness of its tone has seldom been more impressive, since it was well controlled and well sustained. Our space is too limited for the special mention of choruses in which the choir excelled. The principals were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Dalton Baker. They were assisted by Miss Marie Houghton, Miss Dora Arnell, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. H. L. Balfour gave his customary valuable support at the organ. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The annual students' concert and prize-giving of the Guildhall School of Music was held at the Guildhall, on October 28. The presentations were made by the Lady Mayoress, who was supported by the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs. In giving his review of the year's work, Mr. Landon Ronald announced that nearly one hundred students had adopted his new curriculum, by which they received a thorough, all-round musical education. The School had been very active in the matter of public performances, of which fifty had been given.

Amongst the students who took part in the concert, Miss Lilian Stiles-Allen and Mr. William Aspinall (vocalists) were prominent.

ROYAL OPERA COVENT GARDEN.

The 'Ring' and the Russian Ballet have been the main features of the winter season at the Royal Opera Covent Garden, as far as it has progressed to date. It is altogether something new for the Grand Syndicate to make itself responsible for a second season in the year, and it does not seem at all quite clear whether it is intended as an acknowledgment of the reproaches hurled at the summer season, which contained no German opera, or whether it was thought desirable that there should be something going on at the older opera house while a great deal was being accomplished at the new. At all events the alliterative combination of the 'Ring' and the Russian Ballet has proved attractive. The Wagner Trilogy has drawn large audiences, thanks to the beneficial influence of the memorable performances in English, which enabled the public to find out what it is all about; but the performances themselves have not reached a very high level. Dr. Richter, whose presence at the conductor's desk was held out as a high inducement, failed to make his final appearance. His place was taken but not filled by Herr Franz Schalk, of the Vienna Opera, whose chief work has been to show us how much we are indebted to Hans Richter for revealing the beauties of the score. Herr Schalk has demonstrated the powers of the orchestra to make overwhelming noises. The interpretations have introduced one or two new artists with good qualifications as exponents of the Wagnerian manner. The most distinguished are Frau Ritsche Endorf, an experienced singer who has undertaken all the Brünnhildes, and Herr Heinrich Hensel, who made a good Siegmund and Siegfried, in spite of a tendency to employ a greater variety of methods of voice-production than most German tenors. Madame Saltzmann-Stevens made her reappearance, and has given her carefully thought-out conceptions of the Brünnhildes, and also added that of Isolde to Herr Hensel's Tristan. Herr Van Rooy has once more been a vigorous Wotan, and Herr Foss and Herr Bechstein have done good work. The newcomers have included Madame Bengell, Mr. James Goddard, Herr Kiess, Miss Marion Beely, and Madame Petzl-Perard, the last-named also appearing successfully as Elizabeth in an otherwise conventional performance of 'Tannhäuser.'

The Russian Ballet, with its acrobatic feats on the part of the majority and its glaring costumes, crudely coloured scenery and beautiful music, has retained its hold, which has been strengthened by the appearances of Mlle. Pavlova and Madame Kchessinska.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The annual operatic performance by Royal College students, which took place at His Majesty's Theatre on November 21, was as usual an occasion of exceptional musical interest, for it provided a revival of Cherubini's 'Les deux journées,' under the title of 'The water-carrier.' Although over 100 years old, and the work of a composer not renowned for imagination, the opera fell with the attraction of considerable freshness upon the ear—with more freshness, for instance, than does the music of Bellini. An excellent English version and a brisk, efficient performance helped to build the success of the venture. There was no 'star' singer, but a high all-round level (in which unflinching intonation was a noticeable virtue). As regards acting, the palm went to Mr. George Baker, who as Mikéli was a sort of Hans Sachs to the company. Miss Clytie Hine and Mr. David Ellis were the aristocratic heroine and hero, Miss Bessie Jones and Mr. George Macklin were their humble deliverers; Miss F. Mary Edson, Mr. Percy Thomas, and Mr. Joseph Ireland took other conspicuous parts. Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

After the opera came the first performance of a 'mime play' in one act, entitled 'The fairy cap,' to music by Mr. E. Geoffrey Toye. With the captivating dancing and gesture of Miss Irene Flanders (as a shepherd), Miss Christa Wood (as a fairy who loses her cap of invisibility), Miss Ivy Wigmore and Miss Phyllis Foster (as the Wind and the Sun, who devise the recovery of the cap from the shepherd), this little work gained immediate approval. Mr. Toye showed fanciful imagination, the gift of characterization and a strong feeling for orchestral colour, and gratifying promise for his mature years. He conducted in person with some ability.

'THE VEIL.'

This magnum opus of Sir Frederic Cowen was given for the first time in London on November 4, after a postponement occasioned by the composer's regrettable illness. The work it will be remembered, was successfully produced at the Cardiff Festival on September 20, 1910. It was fully analysed in our issues for July and August, 1910, and the Cardiff performance was noticed in our October, 1910, issue. We need not again dwell upon the many fine features of the cantata. On the present occasion the work was performed under the most favourable auspices, and before a highly representative audience. The Cardiff Festival Choir, in order to show their appreciation of the music and the composer, came (for the first time in their history) to London specially for the event, the full London Symphony Orchestra was engaged, the principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Miss Lilian Berger, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, Mr. W. E. Carston, and Mr. Herbert Brown. The composer, now happily recovered, conducted, and Mr. T. E. Aylward was the organist. The Choir sang with impressive effect and the soloists thoroughly entered into the various moods of the work. The cantata is now fairly launched, and it will make its appeal felt wherever earnest, serious, and artistic music is appreciated.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

This Society opened its one-hundredth season with a memorable concert. Herr Mengelberg was known to be an able conductor, but we were not prepared for the wonderful gifts of interpretation and leadership that he displayed on this occasion in each of the widely-contrasted styles of music represented by the programme. Schumann's fourth Symphony and Liszt's 'Les Préludes,' in particular, were played in a manner that could only be described adequately by an exhaustive list of superlatives. To many of the audience, however, his presence was of less moment than that of M. Rachmaninoff, who introduced his third Piano-forte concerto (in D minor, Op. 30) to London. He played with great brilliance, but failed to conceal the inventive and constructive weakness of his music. He was received, however, with much applause, part of which was of such a nature as to provoke the comment on p. 783 of the present issue.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

At the second Saturday afternoon concert of the season, given on November 4, the outstanding attractions were the first performance of Dr. Walford Davies's new Symphony in G, and the appearance of Madame Teresa Carreño as pianoforte soloist. An analysis and appreciation of the Symphony were given in our April, 1911, issue. We need not, therefore, now recapitulate all its leading characteristics. It is obvious that the work is an earnest and sincere expression of the composer's inward feeling. We feel that the idiom is that of the composer of 'Everyman,' but here the style is more closely knit, and moreover there is the note of hope and joy to cheer the listener and make him feel content with the scheme of things. Some critics find the atmosphere of other composers in Dr. Davies's music. This is a very easy thing to say, but for our part we are disposed to believe that Dr. Davies is in the main working out his musical salvation in his own way. The music of the new Symphony may not make an immediate appeal to the general public, but the trained musician can at once perceive its constructive skill and its fine handling of themes. Madame Carreño gave a splendid performance of Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Piano-forte concerto. The audience was roused to extraordinary enthusiasm. Other items were the 'Pavane' (Pour une Infante défunte) by Ravel, and the not particularly interesting Legend for orchestra, 'Zorahayda,' by Svendsen.

The feature of the concert given on November 18 was a magnificent performance of Strauss's 'Don Quixote.' Sir Henry Wood had evidently lavished upon the work all the sympathetic care and assiduity that led to his recent memorable performance of 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' and the beauty and significance of the Fantastic Variations were never more convincing. As to the solo violoncello obbligato, it is enough to say that it was played by Señor Pablo Casals, who also gave an ideal performance of Haydn's Concerto in D. The Symphony was Mozart's in D, No. 35.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The second and third concerts of the series given by this organization increased the esteem in which Sir Edward Elgar is held as a conductor. It is curious that on each of the three occasions the conductor gave his most distinctive readings to one of the smaller works in the programme. At the first concert it was the 'Meistersinger' Overture; on November 6 it was Bach's third 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G, for strings. The interpretation of Beethoven's seventh Symphony had the double advantage of Sir Edward Elgar's personality and the traditions learned by the Orchestra from many conductors. Mr. D. F. Tovey gave an elegant performance of Brahms's second Pianoforte concerto.

On November 20, Señor Casals was the soloist, and Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor his chief contribution. The symphony was Tchaikovsky's fourth, of which the first movement received the most striking performance. The conductor studied his effects and guided every climax in a way that permitted no premature waste of energy. The most interesting feature of the concert was, however, the revival of Dvůřák's brilliant 'Husitská' Overture, with which Sir Edward Elgar seemed thoroughly in sympathy.

THE FREE CHURCH MUSICIANS' UNION.

This useful and flourishing body held its annual dinner at the Great Central Hotel on November 4. The President, Dr. Thomas Keighley, was in the chair, and there were many well-known musicians present. The invited guests were the Rev. Silvester Horne, M.P., the Mayor (Mr. Heywood) and Mayoress of Hackney, and Dr. McNaught. In the course of an admirable speech, Mr. Horne related an experience he had in the States. He was about to ascend the pulpit to preach when the organist, laudably desirous to be civil to a Britisher, asked him to hum over the tune of 'Rule, Britannia,' in order that he might play it as a welcome. Mr. Horne said that he did his best, but after all it was to the accompaniment of 'The girl I left behind me' that he ascended the pulpit stairs. Dr. McNaught, in response to the toast of 'The Musical Press,' alluded to the difficulties of musical criticism nowadays, when it was hard to say whether a new work was abominably bad or a great and original innovation. A musical programme was provided by Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Norrish, Mr. Alex. Tucker, Dr. Leonard Fowles, and Dr. F. M. Abernethy.

London Concerts.

THE PATRON'S FUND.

Much interesting music was brought forward at the Patron's Fund concert, given on October 27 at Queen's Hall, with the help of the London Symphony Orchestra. The new numbers performed were Mr. Harry Keyser's overture, 'Othello,' a thoughtful, earnest, and musicianly work; Mr. John Greenwood's setting for tenor (Mr. Ivor Walters) of 'La belle dame sans merci'; and Mr. Felix White's 'The shepherdess,' for contralto (Miss Florence Taylor). The two new songs were promising, but of no great distinction. Mr. Ivor Fostersang Mr. T. F. Dunhill's 'Comrades'; Mr. Albert Sammons, the leader of the London String Quartet, gave a beautiful performance of Bruch's G minor Violin concerto, and Mr. A. von Ahn Carse's Symphony in C minor was revived. Composers conducted, except in the Concerto, which was given under Sir Charles Stanford's direction.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The continual progress of this organization is well illustrated in their recurring performances of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' one of which they gave at Queen's Hall, under Mr. Arthur Fagge, on October 25. It approached as near to a complete mastery of the technical and emotional requirements of the work as any that has been given by a London choir. The London Symphony Orchestra, as usual, made the most of the orchestral score, and good work was done by the principals—Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. James Hay, and Mr. Frederic Austin.

THE NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Although illness prevented both Mr. Landon Ronald and Madame Alice Verlet from taking their promised part in the concert given by this Orchestra at Queen's Hall on November 9, the occasion was carried to success. In spite of an anti-deadhead campaign on the part of Mr. Russell, the agent, the hall was filled by the adoption of cheap prices, and the duties of conductor were ably carried out by Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. The former directed a spirited performance of his 'Enigma' Variations; the latter directed a Haydn Symphony in G and the accompaniment to Mr. Benno Schönberger in Saint-Saëns's G minor Pianoforte concerto. The orchestral playing doubtless suffered slightly from the absence of Mr. Ronald's familiar and inspiring beat, but it was nevertheless on a very high plane of expression and efficiency. The programme included an unambitious 'Melody' by Mr. Herbert Bedford, and the 'Tannhäuser' overture.

The London Classical Orchestra, nd Bechstein Hall Orchestra, opened its season at Bechstein Hall on October 30. Its object is to perform works that suffer neglect and belong on the whole to the small-orchestra repertory. This object was well served by every number on the programme except Liszt's E flat Pianoforte concerto, played by Miss Evelyn Winter. Schubert's first Symphony was the chief work played, and Mr. Frederick S. Converse's tone-poem 'Joan of Arc,' a somewhat anæmic composition, was the novelty. Madame Jeanne Jomelli sang Saint-Saëns's 'Hymn to Pallas Athene,' and Miss Nancy Price recited to orchestral accompaniment by Mr. Charles Maude. There was also a 'Waltz' by Johann Strauss, dedicated to Brahms. The Orchestra played crisply and with well-balanced agreeable tone under Mr. Theodore Stier's direction.

A programme of exceptionally varied interest was chosen by the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society for its concert at Queen's Hall on November 8. It included movements from Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, Massenet's 'Le dernier sommeil de la Vierge' Prelude, Rubinstein's 'Feramors,' Sullivan's Overture 'Di Ballo,' and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite. Under Mr. Arthur W. Payne's direction the playing was of an extremely high order. The vocalists of the concert were Madame Kirkby Lunn and Mr. Ivor Foster.

The second of the present series of 'Orchestral concerts for young people,' given by Miss Gwynne Kimpton, took place at Steinway Hall on November 11, and was in every respect admirable. Mozart's E flat Symphony was the chief work performed, and the chief subject of discussion in Dr. Borland's excellent preliminary remarks. Mr. Paul Ludwig played Goltermann's Violoncello concerto, and Miss Esther Kalisz played Beethoven's B flat Pianoforte concerto.

MADAME YVETTE GUILBERT.

Madame Yvette Guilbert is an incomparable artist and has usually been a prime favourite with the London public. It was therefore both distressing and surprising to find only a scanty audience at the last two or three of the five recitals she gave recently at Bechstein Hall. These took place on October 31, November 3, 7, 9, and 10. With five programmes from her extraordinary repertoire, she provided a series of entertainments of such manifold variety that it is useless to attempt a selection. Her adaptability, range of emotion, skill in characterization, and personal charm were as remarkable as ever. A new feature, which, although received by some in the audience as a stop-gap, had considerable interest and artistic value, was the playing of old music for clavier and harpsichord, viole d'amour, viol da gamba, flute, oboe d'amour, and bass by the Société des Concerts d'Autrefois. Madame Guilbert received valuable assistance at the pianoforte from M. Gustave Ferrari, who was responsible for the arrangement of several of her songs.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

The organizers of the Broadwood Concerts could not have done better than to invite the London String Quartet to play at the first two of their concerts, held at Æolian Hall on October 26 and November 9. On the former occasion they were joined by Mr. James Lockyer (second viola) in Mozart's String quintet in G minor, and by Mrs. Norman O'Neill (pianist) in César Franck's Quintet. On the latter occasion they played Tchaikovsky's D major Quartet and, with Mr. J. Mundy (second violoncello), Schubert's C major Quintet. The exquisite purity of their style, its one-mindedness, and their almost impeccable execution were a constant joy. They are at their best in music where delicate treatment is the foremost need, and they can be boisterous and passionate with perfect conviction. Advancing years and experience can be confidently expected to add deep intellectual insight and enable them to stand any comparison. Mr. Maurice d'Oisy (vocalist), Miss Marjorie Hayward (violinist), and Miss Edith Walton supplied the programme on November 16.

The Classical Society's Concerts retain their characteristic personal and musical interest. On October 25, Mr. Manuel Gomez and Miss Fanny Davies played Brahms's Sonata in F minor for clarinet and pianoforte, and the pianist was heard alone in some delightful and unfamiliar Italian music, old and new. Mr. Vernon d'Arnalie sang. Señor Casals was the shining light of the concerts on November 1, 8, and 15. At the first he played the Bach unaccompanied Suite in C, and took part in Mozart's String quartet in D (K. 575) and Brahms's String quintet in G, Op. 111. At the second he was accompanied by Mr. D. F. Tovey in Sonatas by Brahms and Professor Julius Röntgen (B minor). At the third he was joined by Mr. Bienvenido Socias in Beethoven's A major Sonata. On this occasion Miss Rhoda von Glehn was the vocalist.

M. Ravel's remarkable String quartet—perhaps the most remarkable in modern music—was well played by the Wessely Quartet at Bechstein Hall, on October 25.

The London Trio, whose chief energies are to be devoted this season to Brahms's Trios, opened on October 30, at Æolian Hall, with an admirable performance of the first of these. Mrs. Harry Bedford was the vocalist of the concert.

Schubert's Quartet in D minor was played excellently by students at the Royal College of Music, on November 1. At the same concert, Mr. Arthur Hedges (flautist) and Master T. Toomey (violinist) did some promising work.

The Hamilton-Harty Sextet, consisting of Mr. A. Fransella (flute), Mr. J. L. Fonteyne (oboe), Mr. Charles Draper (clarinet), Mr. O. Borsdorf (horn), Mr. Wilfred James (bassoon), and Mr. Hamilton Harty (pianoforte), made its début at Bechstein Hall on November 2, introducing an interesting Pianoforte and Wind quintet by Rimsky-Korsakoff, that was new to this country. A Caprice on Danish and Russian airs, by M. Saint-Saëns, and a Quintet by Fuhrmeister, both for combinations of pianoforte and wind, were also heard. The playing was all that was expected from a body of such eminent artists. Mrs. Elsie Swinton sang a pleasing group of new 'Irish sketches,' by Mr. Harty. These were repeated on November 10, when the wind-players and Mr. Harty were heard in Ludwig Thuille's Sextet.

The first Barns-Phillips concert of the season, given at Bechstein Hall on November 4, served to introduce the Phantasie-Trio for two violins and pianoforte by Miss Ethel Barns, commissioned by Mr. Cobbett. It had all the gracefulness and pleasing sentiment characteristic of the composer's best work. Miss Barns, M. Sauret, and Mr. Percy Waller were the executants. Mr. Charles Phillips sang songs by Mr. William Wallace and Mr. Herbert Fryer.

At the chamber-concert given by the Royal Academy of Music at Queen's Hall, on November 13, a 'Fantasie sérieuse' for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. Greville Cooke, and songs by Mr. H. Priestley Smith, were given their first performance. A long programme included vocal quartets and a String quintet (F major) movement by Brahms.

The Walenn Quartet played with great effect at Æolian Hall on November 10. Their programme included a 'Cobbett' Fantasia by Mr. Haydn Wood, and Dohnányi's C minor Quintet (Op. 1), with Miss Olive Blume as pianist.

An all-Russian programme was submitted by the superb St. Petersburg Quartet at Bechstein Hall on November 15, and in this particular sphere, as represented by Quartets of Borodin in A, Tchaikovsky in D, and Tanéïeff in B minor, they again showed themselves unapproachable.

The South Place Sunday Afternoon Chamber Concerts of the present season maintain their characteristic musical interest. Mr. Walthew's Phantasie-quintet and Dvorák's String quintet were given on October 22. The next programme was devoted to compositions by Robert Fuchs, of the Vienna Conservatorium, whose String quartet, Op. 71, and Pianoforte quartet, Op. 75, were played by the Schwiller Quartet. These were musically and interesting works, but they left no mystery of the reason why they have hitherto been unfamiliar. Songs were given by Miss Dorothy Gandy, and Mr. Isidore Schwiller was heard in five Intermezzi for violin, Op. 40, accompanied by Miss Winifred Christie. On November 5, the New Trio took part, with Mr. H. Krause and Mr. Richard Epstein respectively, in Brahms's Quartet in G minor, Op. 25, and Leander Schlegel's Pianoforte quartet, Op. 14. On November 12, the London String Quartet played Beethoven's Op. 59, No. 3, and, with Miss Evelyn Suart, Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet.

VOCAL RECITALS.

In company with Mr. Archy Rosenthal (pianist), Madame Blanche Marchesi gave one of her rare recitals at Æolian Hall on October 23, with an interesting programme that gave good scope for her exceptional interpretative faculty.

Recitals were given by Miss Eda Rosenbusch (Æolian Hall) on October 25; Mr. Ronald Nicholson (Bechstein Hall) on October 26; Madame Alice Esty and her pupil, Miss Eily Lambkin (Bechstein Hall) on October 27. Mr. Theodore Byard's recital at Bechstein Hall, on the evening of October 27, again displayed his highly developed gifts and attractive personality as a singer. Mr. George Henschel showed his similar qualities in a lower vocal range at Bechstein Hall on October 28, and as usual accompanied himself; he gave a second recital on November 11.

Mr. Campbell McInnes's refined and wholly pleasing style of vocalism was exhibited at Æolian Hall on November 1, in Schubert's 'Die schöne Müllerin' song-cycle. His reading was thoroughly expressive, and was devoid of exaggeration.

Recitals were given by Miss Florence von Etlinger (Steinway Hall, November 1), who introduced two 14th century Christmas songs and conducted a small ladies' choir in part-songs by Dr. Walford Davies and Brahms; Miss Adelaide Kind (Bechstein Hall, November 2); Miss Elma Baker (Steinway Hall, November 6); Mr. Kingston Stewart (Bechstein Hall, November 6); Madame Geraldine Jesse (Bechstein Hall, November 9); Mr. Leonard Sicket (Bechstein Hall, November 10); Miss Lydia John (Æolian Hall, November 15); Miss Elena Gerhardt (Bechstein Hall, November 18).

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Mr. Louis Edger introduced three pieces by R. Zwintscher, entitled, 'Südwärts,' on October 27, at Steinway Hall. On October 28, Miss Rosamund Ley gave a recital at Æolian Hall, and Misses Emmy Neuner and Hildegard Klengel, pupils of M. Pugno, played duets at Steinway Hall. Mr. Felix Swinstead introduced an interesting group of his own works in the programme of his recital at Bechstein Hall, on October 31. Miss Janet Wheeler brought forward a severe programme at Æolian Hall on November 2, and played with considerable ability.

The chief interest at Mr. Bachhaus's recital, given at Queen's Hall on November 2, was the constitution of the plébiscite programme. It was as follows:

Sonatas .. ..	'Moonlight' .. ..	Beethoven.
	'Appassionata' .. ..	.. ..
Andante and Rondo Capriccioso .. ..	.. ..	Mendelssohn.
Papillons .. ..	.. ..	Schumann.
Fantasie-Improptu .. ..	.. ..	.. ..
Berceuse .. ..	.. ..	Chopin.
Ballade in A flat .. ..	.. ..	.. ..
Liebestraum .. ..	.. ..	.. ..
La Campanella .. ..	.. ..	Liszt.
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 .. ..	.. ..	.. ..
Prelude in C sharp minor .. ..	.. ..	Rachmaninoff.

Miss Evelyn Winter (Bechstein Hall, November 7) and Miss Ella Hackworth (Bechstein Hall, November 8) both displayed considerable ability.

Miss Margaret Melville gave a recital at Queen's Hall on November 8, with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood, and played three concertos—that of Schumann, Beethoven's fifth, and a new work by Henryk Melcer. This had gained a Rubinstein prize at Berlin, and, although it had no exceptional interest, was quite worth hearing once.

Madame Gabrielle Leschetizky's vigorous methods and exceptional expressive powers were lavished upon the music of Brahms and others at Bechstein Hall, on November 14. Madame Yolanda Mero played Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 109), very finely at Steinway Hall, on November 15.

A recital was given by Miss Eleanor Spencer (Bechstein Hall, November 18).

OTHER RECITALS AND CONCERTS.

Mr. Cedric Sharpe, a violoncellist whose name has frequently figured on programmes at the Royal College of Music, gave his first recital at Bechstein Hall on October 24. Bach's Suite in C and Beethoven's Sonata in A (with Mr. Herbert Sharpe) were his chief pieces, and their exacting requirements were answered with a completeness that promised well for Mr. Sharpe's future.

Miss Isoline Harvey gave an attractive violin recital at 50, Hans Place, by permission of Mrs. Broadbent, on October 24.

The concert with which M. Zacharewitsch opened his second series of 'Concerts intimes' at 46, Berners Street, on October 28, was an occasion of extreme interest, for he gave a reading of Elgar's Violin concerto, with Miss Marie Fromm at the pianoforte, that was in many respects a new conception of the work. It was charged to the full with passionate emotion, and was a technical feat of amazing virtuosity.

Miss Adeline Leon (violinist) and Miss Lucy Polgreen (pianist) were heard together in a Sonata by M. Rachmaninoff at Bechstein Hall on November 4.

Professor Luiz Figueras (violinist) made his first appearance in England at Bechstein Hall on November 6, and showed wide sympathies and wide ability.

Brahms's Sonata in E flat for pianoforte and clarinet was played at Æolian Hall, on November 6, by Miss Ada Thomas and Mr. Charles Draper, who were subsequently joined by Señor Casals in Beethoven's Trio in B flat for clarinet, violoncello, and pianoforte. The same players were heard at a second concert, on November 17, in Brahms's Trio in A minor, Op. 114.

A charming costume-recital of folk-songs and folk-dances was given at Æolian Hall on November 6 by Miss Beatrice Dunn, Mr. Clive Carey, and dancers, adult and juvenile.

Mrs. Hamilton-Soley (pianist), Miss Pauline Theurer and Mr. Harold de Beer (vocalists), Señor José Gómez (violinist), and Miss Helen Mott (violinist), took part in a much-varied concert at Steinway Hall on November 7.

On November 7, Madame Henrietta Schmidt and Miss Edith Heymann gave, at Æolian Hall, a performance of Lekeu's Sonata in G for violin and pianoforte that was more interesting in the anticipation than in the realisation. On the same day and at the same hall Miss Margaret Prior made a highly successful début as a violinist.

Mischa Elman's recital at Queen's Hall on November 9 was like all other recitals given by that remarkable young man.

The programme of the orchestral concert given at the Royal College of Music on November 9 included an interesting and highly successful novelty in the shape of Mr. Douglas Tayler's orchestral fantasy 'Uncle Remus.' The composer draws the full advantage, and with perfect artistic restraint, of the many moods—some of them piquant—suggested by the subject. He directed the performance in person.

An enjoyable smoking concert was given at Hamilton Hall, E.C., on November 16, by the Great Eastern Railway Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. W. Johnson Galloway. The chief feature was the performance, for the first time with full orchestral accompaniment, of Mr. Julius Harrison's 'Viking song' for male-voice choir. The work is full of stirring and picturesque effects in small compass, and is of a kind to appeal to both musicians and chorals. The orchestra gave an exciting performance of the Finale of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and Miss Dorothy Webster and Mr. Dan Price sang.

A front-rank violinist of outstanding ability, Herr Carl Flesch, made his first appearance in England at Queen's Hall on November 15, with the assistance of Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra. In the Concertos of Beethoven and Brahms he made clear that his great Continental reputation was justified.

A new series of 'twelve o'clock' concerts, under the management of Miss Mathilde Verne, opened at Æolian Hall on November 16. Mr. Reinhold von Warlich, as the singer, supplied the chief interest. Miss Erna Schulz (violinist), Miss Esther Kalisz (pianist), and Mr. Alexandra (bassoonist) also took part.

A Sonata by Emmanuel Moór and a Concert-piece by Leopold van der Pals, both for violin and pianoforte, were introduced by Herr Gustav Havemann and Herr Johan Wyszman at Æolian Hall on November 18.

Suburban Concerts.

The complete trilogy of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' was performed by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on November 11, under Mr. Allen Gill's direction. The choir sang with all its familiar wealth of tone and vitality, and efficient assistance was given by Miss Aimée Kemball, Mr. Gwynne Davies and Mr. William Douthitt (principal vocalists), and Mr. G. D. Cunningham (organist).

'St. Paul' was given by the Dulwich Philharmonic Society at the Crystal Palace on November 4, under the direction of Mr. Julius Harrison, who is proving himself an able choral conductor. He led an extremely spirited performance that more than upheld the traditions of the Society. The principals were Miss Dora Gibson, Miss Violet Williams, Mr. Frank Webster, Mr. F. Tabois and Mr. W. Waite. Mr. M. Klickmann was the organist.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Gregor, the new manager of the Imperial Opera house, works very hard, and makes every improvement that will tend to give the Austrian musical season its ancient splendour. He provides us with new singers and new operas. We had the privilege of hearing Caruso, which was a real treat. The Viennese always appreciate this perfect singer and actor. Of course Weingartner and the late Gustav Mahler bestowed more attention upon the orchestral than upon the vocal side, but Gregor has engaged Hans Richter, and we all hope to hear again the marvellous performances which we have missed in the absence of this greatest conductor. The programme for the next month provides new and old operas and ballets. The arrangements for November include the first performance of Herr Bittner's new opera, 'Die Bergfee'; three Mozart operas, 'Le Nozze di Figaro,' 'Don Giovanni,' and 'Il Seraglio'; the ballet, 'The four Seasons of love,' by Lehner. In December we are to have Massenet's 'Jongleur de Nôtre Dame,' 'Iphigénie' of Gluck, 'Corregidor,' by Hugo Wolf, 'Verschenkte frau' of d'Albert, Nedbal's ballet, 'The Devil's grandmother,' 'Aphrodite' by Oberleithner, and Siegfried Wagner's latest work, 'Banadietrich.' Baklanow, a new Russian baritone, has been engaged for several years, as also has Mlle. Bland.

Emmy Destinn and Gilly have given a very successful concert, and Slezak, the celebrated tenor, will give a concert before his departure for the Metropolitan Opera, New York. Giordano's opera, 'Siberia,' was given at the Volksooper with great success. It is very interesting to see that Director Rainer Simons knows how to excite the interest of the Viennese public, by continually bringing new operas and new singers to their notice.

The new light operas have not all been successful, so we are looking forward to hearing Lehar's new work, 'Eva,' which will make its appearance shortly.

EISNER-EISENHOF.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Midland Musical Society, who now form an exceedingly strong amateur choral body, having considerably augmented their number of singers in every department, gave quite an impressive rendering of Sullivan's ever-welcome dramatic cantata, 'The Golden Legend,' in the Town Hall, on October 21. The work appears by no means to have diminished in popularity, although it was composed as far back as 1886. That it stood its test well was more than sufficiently shown by the splendid reception accorded to it by the large audience present. The choir sang throughout with warmth and expression, securing a beautiful tone in the unaccompanied evening hymn, 'O gladsome Light,' and the equally appealing 'O pure in heart.' Admirably and characteristically given were the orchestral accompaniments, which embody so much descriptive matter, and in the cast of principals the committee could hardly have been better served. The soloists were Miss Elsie Yardley (Elsie), Miss Elsie Palmer (Ursula), Mr. Walter J. Otley (Prince Henry), and Mr. Sidney Stoddard (Lucifer). 'The Golden Legend' was followed by Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' magnificently sung by the choir. Mr. J. A. Cotton conducted with care and judgment, and Mr. C. W. Perkins rendered valuable help at the organ.

Mr. Arthur Cooke, one of our foremost pianists and teachers at the School of Music, gave in the large Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute, on October 21, a pianoforte recital of works by Liszt, in commemoration of the centenary of Liszt's birth.

Of special interest was Mr. Max Mossel's first Drawing Room Concert of the current season, given in the Grosvenor Room of the Grand Hotel on October 26, at which Dr. Georg Henschel and Miss Irene Scharrer appeared. Dr. Henschel, who accompanied himself, gave a magnificent selection of songs representative of various schools, delivered with perfect art, imparting to every phrase its characteristic meaning. Miss Irene Scharrer, a favourite pianist in the Midlands, gave an admirable reading of Chopin's second Sonata (Op. 68), in B minor, and other pieces. Variety was given to the programme by some violoncello soli, played with consummate art by our local violoncellist, Mr. Willy Lehmann.

M. Ysaye and Mr. Raoul Pugno united in giving a magnificent violin and pianoforte recital in the Town Hall on October 27. The concert opened with Brahms's Sonata in A major (Op. 100). Its exposition was as noble as it was erudite, and created a deep impression. On this occasion, M. Ysaye introduced his son Gabriel, who joined his father in a wonderfully impressive Sonata for two violins, by Handel, superbly rendered in every detail.

Madame Blanche Marchesi, who has not appeared here for some time past, was the vocalist at the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra's first concert of the season, given in the Town Hall on October 28, under Mr. Julian Clifford's able conductorship. Her voice carried remarkably well in Senta's ballad from Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' and in the wonderful closing scene from Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung.'

Mr. Leonard Rayner, a young pianist from the Midlands, gave a pianoforte recital in the Temperance Hall on October 31, with much artistic success. He possesses a sensitive touch and an admirably schooled technique. A great musical treat was to hear two such renowned artists as Madame Carreño and Mischa Elman, who gave a pianoforte and violin recital in the Town Hall on November 13.

The Quinlan Opera Company gave a fortnight's operatic season at the Prince of Wales Theatre from November 6 to November 18, and secured an almost unprecedented success, the theatre being packed every night. As far as memory serves Birmingham has never been so well provided in the way of grand opera, and the success was well earned. In the first instance one had the finest orchestra yet heard here in opera, and secondly the whole mise en scène surpassed all previous efforts relating to grand opera. For the first time local audiences heard Wagner's 'Valkyrie,' of which a magnificent performance was given. Of equal interest was the superb performance of 'Tristan and Isolde,' only once heard previously in Birmingham.

The Birmingham Choral Union's first concert of the season was given in the Town Hall on November 16, under Mr. Thomas Facer's conductorship. The work chosen was Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul,' first heard in Birmingham under the composer's direction at the Triennial Musical Festival of 1837. Mr. Facer steered his forces through the labyrinth of the by no means easy score with commendable efficiency, securing on the whole an intelligent performance, admirable in tone, precision and phrasing. The solo parts were well sung by Miss M. Phyllis Bradley, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. William Burrows and Mr. Peter Dawson. Valuable help was given by Mr. C. W. Perkins, the city organist.

The Birmingham Philharmonic Society's second orchestra concert of the season was given in the Town Hall on November 8, under Mr. Percy Pitt's conductorship in place of Mr. Thomas Beecham, who was prevented from fulfilling his engagement on account of indisposition. Mr. Percy Pitt, however, proved himself to be a master of his art and realised some poignant and effective performances of Beethoven's second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Fantasia 'Romeo and Juliet,' Dvorák's symphonic poem 'The golden spinning wheel,' the 'Hebrides' overture, and pieces by Debussy.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association's performance of the 'Messiah' attracted an overflowing audience to the Town Hall on November 18. The choir and orchestra admirably discharged their duties under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's conductorship, and the work done by the principals, Madame Aston, Miss Clara Winwood, Mr. Jesse Hackett and Mr. Thomas Howell, was quite satisfactory. Mr. C. W. Perkins was the organist.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The current musical season is now in full swing, and the weeks are filled with musical doings of undeniable interest. Some very effective playing by Mr. Dan Godfrey's Municipal Orchestra has been forthcoming at the excellent series of Symphony Concerts, and the works chosen for performance have been selected to meet the diverse views of the various sections of the public. Symphonies by Beethoven (the C minor and the Seventh), Rachmaninoff (in E minor), Kallinikoff (G minor), Arnold Trowell (E minor), and Brahms (the Third and the Fourth) have been performed. The concertos have been Brahms's Violin concerto (Mr. Louis Siegel), Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat (Miss Tosta de Benici), a Violoncello concerto by Jules de Swert (Mr. Arnold Trowell), Violin concerto No. 9, by Spohr (Mr. Charles Fletcher), César Franck's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte (Mr. Vernon Warner), Boellmann's Violoncello variations (Mr. Felix Salmond), and Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto (Mr. Anton Maaskoff). Dr. Ethel Smyth's visit to conduct a performance of the Overture to her opera 'The Wreckers' was a special feature of the concert on November 8.

Among other events which have taken place lately have been concerts by Mr. Watkin Mills and party; Messrs. Kreisler, Casals, and Bauer (chamber music recital); Madame Marie Horne and party; Mr. Charles Clark (Wagner concert in conjunction with the Municipal Orchestra); Backhaus; Miss Adela Verne and party; Madame Tetrassini and party; Mlle. Alice Verlet and party; Miss Elena Gerhardt; Herr Fritz Kreisler (orchestral concert).

For those who have a taste for musical æsthetics, provision has been made in a course of lectures by Mr. T. W. Surette. Last year's series of lectures on 'Great Symphonies' proved so much of an attraction that Mr. Surette was induced to give a second series this season. The illustrations by Mr. Godfrey's orchestra materially help the lecturer's interesting discourses.

Reference must not be omitted to the conspicuously successful inauguration of the newly-formed Municipal Choir, which took place on November 14. Edward German's light opera 'Merrie England' was the work chosen for the launching of the venture, the choir rendering the cheery music with much vivacity and spirit. The composer conducted, and the principal soloists were Miss Rachel James, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Sam Hemsall, and Mr. David Brazell.

Mr. Charles Bishenden gave a concert-lecture on 'Henry Purcell and singers of his time,' at 105, Oxford Street, on November 2.

BRISTOL.

The Bristol Royal Orpheus Society and the Gloucester Orpheus Society gave two combined concerts in their respective cities in order to celebrate the term of office as sheriff of gentlemen who are musicians, viz., Mr. George Riseley at Bristol, and Mr. Dinnam Clark at Gloucester. On October 24, the Bristol Choir went to Gloucester and, with the Gloucester forces, sang at a well-attended concert in the Shire Hall. The duty of conductor was divided between Mr. Riseley and Dr. A. H. Brewer (conductor of the Gloucester Choir). The programme included two part-songs by Mr. C. Lee Williams, which the composer directed, Mendelssohn's 'Thou comest here to the land,' and Grieg's 'Landerkennung,' accompanied upon two pianofortes by Dr. Brewer and Mr. Williams. Songs were sung by Miss Ethel Harris and Miss Gertrude Winchester. On the following night the combined choirs sang in Colston Hall, Bristol, and the programme was repeated. So gratifying were the results of the concerts that probably others of a similar character will be given.

At the Victoria Rooms, on November 1, a large audience was attracted by a performance in which Miss Lilian Hawkins played the harp, Miss Imogene Hawkins the pianoforte, and Mr. Stuart Edwards was vocalist. The tenth season of the Clifton Chamber Concerts commenced on November 2, when a concert given at the Victoria Rooms was well attended. Changes have occasionally been made in the constitution of the Quintet which is at present composed of Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Albert Morgan (violins), Albert Best (viola) and Percy Lewis (violinello). The principal compositions given were the Quintet in F minor by Brahms (Op. 34) and Novak's Quartet in G (Op. 22) for strings, the latter played publicly for the first time in Bristol. On November 8, Madame Elder Fogarty (contralto) gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms. She was assisted by Miss Alice Perkins and Mr. Clive Thomas (vocalists), Miss Jenny Meid (pianoforte) and Mr. Arthur Angle (violin), from Cardiff.

On November 18, the Bristol Choral Society gave their first concert of the season at Colston Hall. The work performed was the 'Faust' of Berlioz, the soloists being Miss Mabel Manson (Margaret), Mr. Henry Turpenney (Faust), Mr. William Thomas (Brander), and Mr. Robert Burnett (Mephistopheles). Band and choir numbered 500. Mr. Harold Bernard was leader, and Mr. George Riseley directed the performance with ability.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

THE THREE TOWNS.

A season which promises to be exceptionally busy is now in full swing, and the past month has been one of unusual interest. The Misses Smiths' enterprising and important scheme of chamber concerts, involving visits to Plymouth by artists of the highest rank, was inaugurated on October 25, by a vocal recital by Dr. Georg Henschel. The number of subscribers who supported we shall hope to see increased, but it was the right kind of audience—one sufficiently interested to desire to be edified and educated. The only other chamber music event was a visit of Messrs. Newstead and Zacharewitsch, who gave a pianoforte and violin recital on November 16.

The first of Mr. R. G. Evans's symphony concerts, on November 3, was made memorable by an impressive performance of the Beethoven C minor (No. 5). A big success was made also by a young contralto vocalist, Miss Eileen Buck. To give his men of the Royal Garrison Artillery band work of interest, and to also interest the public, Mr. R. G. Evans has organized a series of orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings at popular prices. The success of the first of these, on November 18, justified the venture. The 'Jupiter' Symphony of Mozart was selected by Mr. J. W. Newton as the chief work at his first symphony concert of a new series at Stonehouse on November 7.

On November 1, concerts of miscellaneous character were given at Pennycross and Crownhill respectively; and on November 14, Mr. Albert Doyle (recently appointed organist of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Plymouth) organized a programme of music of good standard in connection with a presentation to the Bishop of Plymouth.

DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Choral events have not yet become numerous, most of the Societies being engaged in preparation. The class at Plympton, trained by Mr. David Parkes, sang in very good tone in Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' with small orchestra, on November 7. The Isca Glee Singers gave their fourth annual concert at Exeter on November 10; and on November 15 a cantata was sung in Barnstaple Music Hall, by all the members of Bands of Hope in the Borough, conducted by Mr. E. J. Labbett.

A new organ was opened in Ashwater Methodist Church, on November 2, by Mr. H. M. Guest, of Exeter; and on November 8, in connection with a jubilee commemoration at Northernhay Chapel, Exeter, Mr. H. Moreton (Plymouth) gave a fine organ recital, Miss Linford Browne being the vocalist. In St. Sidwell's Chapel, on November 16, Mr. Lee, of Jersey, gave an organ recital.

The Haydn String Quartet located at Torquay gave their sixteenth concert on October 26, performing Haydn's Quartet in G (No. 50), and Dohnányi's Quartet in D flat, Op. 15. Miss Eileen Buck was the vocalist. Miss Beatrice Heaviside (contralto), and Mr. C. T. Heaviside (cello), were assisted on November 11, at Torquay, in a vocal and instrumental recital by Mrs. G. H. Handford (pianoforte). A Fantasia suite for pianoforte and cello, by Mr. C. T. Heaviside, was played, and Miss Heaviside sang a well-chosen selection of songs.

Concerts of the miscellaneous order have been given at Seaton, on November 2, in aid of the Axe Vale Musical Society; at Dartmouth, on November 9, in aid of the District Nursing Association, the artists being Miss Marie Belton, Messrs. Walter Belgrove and C. G. Pike, with the Newton Male Quartet; and on November 13 at Paignton, arranged by Mr. Wilfred Taylor, with a small orchestra.

A week's répertoire performance of opera was given at Exeter, November 13 to 18, by Signor Castellano's Italian company.

CORNWALL.

Padstow Musical Society has been revived, and is studying 'The Creation,' under the direction of the Vicar. Torpoint Choral Association, on November 8, gave a promenade concert at Gravesend in support of its funds. The fine Male-choir Association, with Truro People's Palace, gave a concert on November 13 under the conductorship of Mr. Wallace C. Smith, assisted by several vocal and instrumental soloists. Goldsithney Wesleyan Choir sang Gaul's cantata, 'Ruth,' on November 15, conducted by Mr. John Rees. The Plymouth Orpheus Male-Voice Choir sang several of the most popular and important pieces in their répertoire at a concert given at Liskeard on November 15, in aid of a fund to provide new instruments for the Liskeard Temperance Band; an effort which is a direct result of the Cornwall county music competitions. Mr. David Parkes conducted.

In aid of Gunnislake Nursing Association, a miscellaneous concert was given on November 9; and on November 11, at Stythians, glees and part-songs were sung by Stythians Male Quartet. St. Petroc's Quartet sang at Bodmin, on November 14, the test-piece of the Cornwall Music Competitions: a capable little orchestra at the same concert was conducted by Mr. J. Williams, and Messrs. Charles Saunders and Watkin Mills sang songs and duets.

DUBLIN.

The Royal Dublin Society chamber music recitals commenced on October 30, with a pianoforte recital by Madame Carreño, who played before the largest audience ever assembled in the Lecture Theatre.

The Sunday Concerts have been in full swing since October 22. The orchestra, under Dr. Esposito, have played the following symphonies: Mozart in G minor; Beethoven, No. 2, in D; and Schubert, the 'Unfinished.' The soloists included, Mr. Clyde Twelveteers (violinello), Herr Adolf Wilhelmj and Mr. Octave Grisard (violin), and Miss Gertrude Cuolahan (who played the solo in Weber's 'Concertstück'). The vocalists included Miss Madeline Macken, Miss Lena Munro, and Miss Lily Christie, and Mr. Gerald Murphy, who made a successful first appearance in Dublin.

The Feis Ceoil is announced for the week commencing May 6, 1912.

On November 15, the Dublin Orchestral Society gave the fourth concert for the year in the Gaiety Theatre. Dr. Esposito conducted a programme that included Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, and the final scene from 'Die Walküre.' The Society will have a considerable debt to meet at the close of the season, and the committee have asked for donations towards paying it off.

Mr. John Larchet has started a series of popular orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings in the Abbey Theatre; they have, so far, been well attended.

EDINBURGH.

At the first of Messrs. Paterson's orchestral concerts, given in the M'Ewan Hall on November 13, Mr. Mlynarski conducted excellent performances of Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, Georg Schumann's 'Lebensfreude' Overture, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor. The soloist was M. Pablo Casals, who delighted the audience in Haydn's Violoncello concerto.

At the second concert, on November 20, the programme included Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' Overture, and Raff's 'Im Walde' Symphony. M. Mischa Elman was the soloist, and his performance of the solo part in Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor created much enthusiasm.

The first of the present series of Concerts for Young People, given under the auspices of the Edinburgh Musical Education Society, was held in the Queen's Hall on November 8. The programme comprised violin solos, pianoforte solos, and songs, and the performers were Miss Copeland, violinist, Mr. Appleyard, pianist, and Mr. Alfred Young, vocalist. Professor Niecks prefaced each number with historical and explanatory remarks, and the concert was greatly appreciated by the juvenile audience.

Under the direction of Professor Niecks the first of the present season's series of historical concerts was given in the University music class-room on November 8. The programme was devoted to compositions by J. S. Bach for string orchestra, with and without flute, violin, and pianoforte solo, and comprised the 'Brandenburg' Concerto in D major, No. 5, with flute, violin and cembalo solo; Cembalo concerto in D minor; Suite in B minor, with flute solo; and the Concerto in D minor for two violins and orchestra. The string band was drawn mainly from the Scottish Orchestra. Mr. Henri Verbrugghen acted as conductor and violinist.

Among other concerts given recently have been vocal recitals by Miss Jean Waterston; Miss Margaret Kennedy, who was assisted by Miss P. K. Fraser, pianist, and Mrs. Tobias Matthay, reciter; violin recital by Mr. George A. Vincent; violin and pianoforte recital by Miss Theo. Hunter and Miss Mabel Barons; pianoforte recitals by Miss Edith Walton and by Mr. E. B. Appleyard.

GLASGOW.

On October 23, the Bach Choir opened their sixth season with a chamber concert, under the direction of Mr. R. Finnie McEwen. The programme comprised the Sonata in B minor, for violin and pianoforte (excellently played by Miss Bessie Spence and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland), the Concerto in C major for three pianofortes and strings (Mrs. Younger, Messrs. Finnie McEwen and Fuller Maitland, pianists), and the solo cantata, 'It is enough,' for baritone, with oboe, strings, and continuo (Mr. Robert Burnett, vocalist). An interesting and educative feature of the concert was Mr. Fuller Maitland's introductory remarks bearing on the pieces forming the programme. The Ysaye-Pugno recital, on November 3, will be memorable for the remarkable rendering of the 'Kreutzer' Sonata and Mozart's Sonata in D major. M. G. Ysaye took part with his father and M. Pugno in a sonata by Handel, and Mr. J. MacLagan Blair contributed some vocal solos. Mr. Benno Moisewitsch, a pianist of great gifts, made an excellent impression on his first appearance before a Glasgow audience on November 6. The opening concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union took place on November 14, when the Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Emil Mlynarski, made a brilliant appearance. The soloist of the evening was M. Pablo Casals, who gave an ideal performance of Haydn's Violoncello concerto in D. In this and in some solos M. Casals's playing evoked great enthusiasm. The Symphony was Tchaikovsky's No. 4, in F minor, which received a fine interpretation from Mr. Mlynarski. A novelty on the programme was Georg Schumann's richly-scored overture, 'Lebensfreude.'

The Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts were resumed on November 18, before an audience of very encouraging dimensions. The programme, cast generally on popular lines, included Beethoven's seventh Symphony and the overture to 'Oberon.' Madame Blanche Marchesi was solo vocalist, and her contributions to the programme afforded the audience much pleasure. The only other events to be recorded this month are recitals by two local vocalists, Miss Boyd Steven and Mr. Thorpe Davie, and the inaugural recital by Mr. J. E. Hodgson on the fine organ recently erected by Messrs. Norman & Beard in Lansdowne Church.

The choral societies of the district are busy with their programmes. The organizers of the successful Competitive Festival held recently are arranging a similar event to take place in the spring.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The second concert of the Philharmonic Society, on October 24, is memorable as the occasion of the first visit to Liverpool of M. Rachmaninoff. His acceptance of the Society's invitation roused anticipations which were pleasurably realised. The gifted Russian composer appeared as solo pianist in his third Pianoforte concerto, Op. 30 (in which the orchestra was directed by Mr. S. Spielman), and as conductor of his second Symphony, Op. 27. These important works were new to Liverpool, and both made a highly favourable impression, especially the Concerto, as played by its composer. It is on the highest plane of virtuoso music, and full of interest in its themes and developments. Miss Mignon Nevada's brilliant vocalisation in Rossini's 'Una voce poco fa' created a furore. The choir, conducted by Mr. Branscombe, were heard in three of Carl Flitner's arrangements for chorus and orchestra of Schubert's pianoforte values.

Sir Frederic Cowen's new work, 'The Veil,' received an impressive performance at the third Philharmonic Concert on November 7. In his powerful setting of Robert Buchanan's poem, which offers few lyrical opportunities, the composer has adopted a new style. He has assimilated the best elements of modern music in his writing for the solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, and shows astonishing elasticity of technique and method. 'The Veil' is undoubtedly a work of great distinction, and the composer, who conducted the performance, received a flattering and friendly recall. The vocal principals included Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Dily Jones, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, Mr. G. N. Barnett, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

At the second Akeroyd Symphony Orchestra concert on October 31, three contrasted examples of Rhapsodies were played, viz., German's delightful 'Welsh Rhapsody,' Sir C. V. Stanford's elegiac Irish Rhapsody, 'The Lament for the Sons of Ossian,' and the Somerset Rhapsody (M.S.) by Gustav von Holst. Mlle. Yvonne Astruc, a gifted violinist, was heard in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, and the vocalist was Mr. Harry Reynolds, a baritone who sang well.

The genius of Mr. Harry Evans as a conductor, and the responsive powers of the Welsh Choral Union, were congenially employed on October 18 in a splendid performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf.' This comparatively early masterpiece had been happily chosen, and was apparently as interesting to an engrossed audience as it was unmistakably enjoyable to the performers. With Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. David Brazell as vocal principals, the solos were excellently sung, and in the choral music, the Welsh Choral Union exhibited the qualities of tone, vigour, attack, and expression which always characterize their singing. Under the leadership of Mr. Akeroyd, the orchestral part, which is such an essential feature of the work in emphasising the subtle and suggestive use of the leit motif principle, was excellently played. The second part of the programme included the 'William Tell' Overture, and Edward German's Coronation March and Thanksgiving Hymn, heard for the first time here.

The programme of the third of the Symphony Orchestra concerts on November 14 was devoted to the grateful music of the old masters, exemplified by Cherubini's 'Anacreon' Overture, Beethoven's Triple Concerto for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, 'Ballet Suite,' Gluck-Mottl, and the 'Magic Flute' Overture. In the Concerto the solo parts were played by the three admirable artists forming the 'Manchester Trio,' Messrs. Edward Isaacs, Arthur Catterall and Carl Fuchs.

The 154th concert of the Societa Armonica, on November 4, commenced with the Symphony in B flat, Op. 20, by Ernest Chausson, a mediocre work, by no means fitly representative of the modern serious French school. The leader of the excellent orchestra, Mr. E. A. Garrod, played very cleverly in Joachim's 'Hungarian Concerto.' Conducted by Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, Svendsen's 'Zorahayda' Légende, and Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un faune' received commendable interpretations.

The Hallé Orchestra visited Liverpool on October 21, when they were conducted by Mr. Michael Baling, who gave a forceful reading of Beethoven's seventh Symphony, followed by especially fine performances of Wagner's 'Faust' Overture, 'Siegfried Idyll' and the 'Bacchanale' from 'Tannhäuser,' in which a choir of sixteen female voices, stationed out of sight, sang with very beautiful effect.

Mr. Mischa Elman gave a memorable display of his phenomenal gifts as a violinist at his recital on October 28.

Among recent events deserving note was the concert given by the Misses McCullagh in the Yamen Rooms, on October 23. The programme opened with Brahms's Trio in C (Op. 87), sustained by Miss Helena (pianoforte), Miss Isabel (violin), and Miss Mary (violoncello), and contained solos cleverly played by these accomplished sisters. The songs by Miss Edith McCullagh, who is a charming lieder singer, completed an attractive programme.

Mr. Plunket Greene, accompanied by Mr. S. Liddle, gave his lecture on 'Interpretation in Song' to the members of the newly-formed Rodewald Concert Club, on October 30.

For the third meeting of the Concert Club, on November 13, a delightful choral programme was provided, which included madrigals by Morley, Weelkes, Wilbye, Gibbons and Byrd, well sung by a choir trained and directed by Dr. James Lyon. The atmosphere created by this fine old English music was somewhat rudely dispelled by Richard Strauss's Violin and Pianoforte sonata, cleverly played by Mr. J. E. Matthews and Dr. Stanley Dale.

Mr. Frederic Brandon, at his pianoforte recitals in the Rushworth Hall on November 4 and 20, chose diversified programmes, which he performed with masterly skill.

The well-known organ composer, Mr. William Faulkes, displayed his versatility, especially as a Chopin player, by his pianoforte recital in St. Margaret's Hall on November 7, when he was vocally assisted by Mrs. George B. Russell.

The St. Helen's Musical Society gave a worthy performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on November 8, under the direction of Dr. S. B. Siddell, with Mr. V. Akeroyd as leader of the orchestra. The vocal principals were Miss Alice Hare, Miss Annie Johnson, Mr. John Booth, Mr. Bridge Peters, and Master Frank Rodgers (Sheffield Parish Church Choir). The band and choir comprised 170 performers.

Two notable chamber concerts were held on November 10 and 18, the first of these being given by the St. Petersburg Quartet, who played quartets by Tchaikovsky, Borodin and Tanéïev; and the second by the Brodsky Quartet, who gave ideally perfect expositions of Beethoven's Quartet in G, Op. 18, No. 2, Schubert's Quartet in G, Op. 16, and Dvůřák's Quartet quintet in A, (with Mr. Frank Merrick as pianist).

The London Centre of the Free Church Musicians' Union has made arrangements by which members of the Union can have the use of the club rooms connected with the Institute at the King's Weigh House Church, Thomas Street, Oxford Street. The Institute is now the headquarters of the Union in London, and the joint secretaries, Mr. John Spink and Mr. Thomas M. Baker, will be pleased to reply to any inquiry.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

Prior to the inauguration of the Hallé season, of which brief mention was made last month, the executive took the somewhat unusual step of inviting the subscribers to meet them in the Lord Mayor's parlour, there to hear a statement as to the executive's intentions for the present season. Mr. E. J. Broadfield, the chairman, appeared in a very pessimistic mood as to the Society's future, and urged more extensive support of the concerts, otherwise he foresaw complete suspension. Mr. Gustav Behrens, the Society's treasurer, amongst other things reported that in the last four or five years the income from subscribers had fallen by about £1,200. More democratic management was urged, but it was tolerably evident that this executive believes in a benevolent autocracy, for a deaf ear was turned to all suggestions of an enlarged executive, which, it was admitted, included only one musician (Dr. Brodsky) amongst its five members. The members of the orchestra had been invited to attend, but a concert in Liverpool caused their absence. A long letter in the Manchester Guardian voiced their feelings: not mere re-organization, but radical and drastic reform was their remedy for an artistic business which was losing both money and prestige. They wished the committee to be increased from five to eight or nine, with at least one representative from the band: a paid permanent secretary (also chosen from the orchestra) in place of the present hon. secretary. Other reforms advocated were payment for admission to rehearsals, and open competitions for any vacancies occurring in the band, instead of the existing arrangements whereby students of the Royal Manchester College of Music have preferential treatment. These students would probably gain the post, but they should certainly take their chance along with any other applicants. The sketch of the season's activities, which Mr. Broadfield was enabled to give showed that, whatever else may happen, there will be constant interest in variety, and the attendances thus far in the season have shown a welcome revival.

Schalk's duties at Covent Garden precluded him from carrying out his original intention to conduct on November 16 and 23; Oskar Fried took his place on November 16, and Sir Edward Elgar conducted a programme of his own works (including his Symphony No. 2), on November 23, which must be noticed next month. At the second concert, on October 26, for the first time in the history of the Hallé Society (now in its fifty-fourth season) there was no orchestra, Pugno, Ysäye and his son playing chamber-music in the Free Trade Hall. Pugno played the 'Moonlight' Sonata, and, with Ysäye, the Violin sonata in C minor (Op. 30, No. 2), naively described in the programme as the Beethoven Sonata in C minor for pianoforte alone.

The combination of Sir Henry Wood, Kreisler, and the Elgar Violin concerto on November 2 brought a vast audience. A similar combination (with fifty members of the Queen's Hall band) towards the end of last winter only drew half the number. Such is Manchester's inveterate distrust of new work, howsoever distinguished the composer; consequently it is only common business policy to float new music here when the public comes to hear some great performer. Locally, in the last year or two, there has been a good deal of captious criticism of Wood; but his work on this occasion revealed him as a rather bigger man than some of his critics have realised: no greater technician of the orchestra has appeared in Manchester. A programme drawn from Dukas, Bantock, Elgar, Saint-Saëns, Mozart ('Haffner' Symphony), and Rimsky-Korsakoff showed the extensive range of his sympathies.

The two following concerts, given on November 9 and 16, were conducted by Oskar Fried, of Berlin, who, serving his apprenticeship under Von Bülow, and being also a disciple of the late Gustav Mahler, unites in his person an unusual combination of qualities. He impresses one as a purely temperamental conductor who is apt to run to extremes. In Berlioz's 'Carneval Romain' he positively lashed his band until he got the requisite tumultuous expression, making tremendous drafts upon his reserves of nervous energy. One very rarely sees a conductor so emotionally exhausted.

The Beethoven Choral Symphony was thoroughly exhilarating, but there can be no sense, for the sake of brilliance, in speeding up a movement to such an extent as to make clear instrumental articulation an impossibility, and this often happened in the course of the work, and the choral finish was a wild rush. No choir, with only one rehearsal, could 'live' at such a pace. Weingartner's dicta about excessively fast and slow tempi deserve more attention from Mr. Fried.

His second programme betrayed the same predilection for abnormally graphic 'programme-music' as typified in Liszt's 'Mazeppa' poem and Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique.' He handled the Liszt work with the utmost success—firm outline, high—even lurid—colour, and impetuosity that swept the audience to its feet at the close of the triumphant Finale—the barbaric splendour of the scene was most vividly portrayed. Certainly 'Mazeppa' never came home to a Hallé audience as on this occasion. At the previous concert one noticed Fried's affinity for the music of Berlioz, and the performance of the Symphony only accentuated the impression. Madame Carreño introduced the second Pianoforte concerto of her former pupil, MacDowell.

The Hallé Choir is busily at work on Bantock's unaccompanied Choral ode in symphonic form, three of the four movements already being in the hands of the choir, and the fourth will be ready by the beginning of December. The composer took a rehearsal of the slow movement (No. 2, in twenty parts, for mixed voices) during the second week in November, and was thoroughly satisfied that his ideas are practicable, as well as beautiful in themselves, and the choir have evident zest in preparing the score. It is interesting to know that this setting of portions of Swinburne's 'Atalanta in Calydon,' radical departure though it be from any choral form we have hitherto known, is only a 'sketch' for a work of still greater scope and design on the subject 'Pan,' which Bantock is contemplating in the not distant future—and all this is the outcome of adjudicating at a competitive festival at Blackpool a few years ago, 'When,' in his own words, 'I realised what real choral singing was'!

On November 10, there was a Bantock evening given by the young Musical Society (arrangements being made by Mr. Gerald Cumberland), in which the composer took a leading part; no concert of a similar nature has before excited so much interest nor given so much genuine pleasure. The Orpheus Glee Society, under Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, sang the early 'Cavalier Tunes,' written eighteen years ago in the composer's novitiate, and the more recent 'Lost Leader' and 'Lucifer in Starlight'; so delighted was Professor Bantock that he has dedicated the last choral song to these gifted men and their leader. Oskar Fried was an interested member of the audience, never before having heard singing of such quality.

The fortnight of opera from the Quinlan Company, following the 'Ring' dramas of last spring, has emphasised Manchester's present poverty in theatres where opera on a big scale can be staged.

Happily we are within measurable sight of two new big theatres, one of which, at any rate, will accommodate 4,000, which means that at last there will be a chance of the 'people' getting opera at 'popular' prices.

Interest during the Quinlan visit was curiously divided between the Paris version of 'Tannhäuser,' 'Tristan and Isolde' (never hitherto so adequately done in Manchester), Debussy's 'L'enfant prodigue' and Puccini's 'latest novelty' opera.

But Wagner carried the day, and Manchester's whetted appetite for his music-dramas should make Mr. Ernst Denhof's prospects for success next March very rosy.

Concerts of chamber-music have been too numerous even to mention briefly, but a special significance attached to Mr. Max Mayer's first concert in the performance of the young, thirteen-year-old Viennese composer, Korngold's, Trio in D major, Op. 1, which is so abstruse that Mr. Mayer arranged that it should be played twice that evening.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT.

The Philharmonic Orchestra began their season with a well varied and interesting programme on October 27. Beethoven's seventh Symphony was the most important item. Vaughan Williams's beautifully mystical 'Symphonic impression,' 'In the Fen Country' was the novelty (one British work will appear at each concert), and showed the power of young England to write music far removed from academics. Mr. E. L. Bainton conducted with commanding ability.

In the evening, a little girl of twelve, Margaret Fairless, gave a violin recital, and played with an ability far beyond her years. Mr. E. J. Potts sang songs of Strauss and Vaughan Williams.

The next night Principal Hadow lectured to a public meeting organized by the Free Church Musicians' Union. The topic of his address was one upon which he is a great authority, 'The choice of Church music,' and it was delivered in his own inimitable way. The trend of his remarks may be gathered from the names Tye, Byrd, Gibbons, Purcell, Alford, Walmisley, and S. S. Wesley, anthems by whom were well sung by the Jesmond Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. J. Heywood.

Miss Stockmarr's powerful pianoforte playing was well displayed in Chopin's B minor Sonata, and the Bach-Busoni Fugue in D, at the first concert of the Classical Society, on October 30. Although obviously not in good form, Miss Ellen Beck gave vigorous rendering of songs by Strauss, Brahms, and others. The Wesely Quartet appeared the following Friday at a meeting of the Chamber Music Society, and contributed Beethoven's 'Harp' quartet, three light Novellettes by Glazounow, and Ravel's Quartet, which grows simpler on repeated hearings. One of the best concerts given by this Society was provided on November 10 by Mr. T. Dunhill (pianoforte), Miss M. Hayward (violin), Mr. Frank Bridge (viola), and Mr. E. Mason (violinello). Three modern British compositions were given—a pianoforte quartet by Mr. Dunhill, a charming Trio by Hurlstone, and an imaginative and highly interesting Phantasia-Quartet by Mr. Bridge. Both performers and works created much enthusiasm. The concert concluded with Brahms's second Pianoforte quartet.

On November 8, the choir of Elswick Road Wesleyan Church gave an excellent performance of Parry's 'Judith,' no light undertaking for a church choir, and one which brought much credit to the conductor, Mr. George Dodds. Mr. Wall led a body of strings, and Mr. H. Y. Dodds presided at the organ.

On the following evening the Choral Society at Whitley Bay gave, with orchestra, Boughton's intense and ambitious 'Midnight,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' and Mr. Bainton conducted his clever little part-song, 'The Ballad of Semmerwater.' Mr. Frank Mullings was the soloist, and declaimed with infectious enthusiasm the 'Forge song' from 'Siegfried.' At a meeting of guarantors, it was decided to postpone the next Newcastle Festival for a year. The reason for this regrettable, but inevitable, decision is the absence of a suitable hall. The Town Hall is too small and inconvenient, and the use of a theatre, as on the last occasion, places the choir at a serious acoustical disadvantage, and involves a great outlay in preparation.

Sir George Martin presided at the dedication services of the enlarged Cathedral organ on November 5. Thirteen recitals by seven well-known organists have attracted large audiences, in spite of, or, it may be, because of, excellent programmes of almost invariably lofty aims.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

An opportunity was given to lovers of music in Nottingham to hear Madame Tetrassini on October 26, when she received a hearty reception; her singing was rapturously applauded, and she was ably supported by Mr. Alfred Webster, Mr. Robert Radford, Miss Flora Mann, Miss Lillian Berger (vocalists), and Miss Mabel Moss (pianist), and Miss Edith Penville (flautist).

The opening concert of the re-constructed Long Eaton Orchestral Society proved a great success on November 7. Under the guidance and training of Mr. F. Mountney the orchestral items, including Schubert's 'Unfinished Symphony,' Weber's 'Peter Scholl' Overture, and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, were admirably performed.

It is long since the singing of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society has been heard to greater advantage than in the performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on November 9. Perhaps a little more 'tenor' quality in the higher male voices and a keener attack in the altos would have improved the work. The orchestra also did good work, nowhere more noticeably than in the string tone. The solos also received admirable treatment from Miss Carrie Tubbs, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Robert Burnett. Mr. Allen Gill is to be congratulated on the success of the work, and it would be unfair not to mention Mr. Wynn Reeves, who led the orchestra for the first time.

The second Nottingham Subscription Concert took place on November 15, when an excellent programme was presented by Miss Elena Gerhardt, Mr. Maurice D'Oisly and Mr. Dalton Baker, vocalists, Mr. Felix Salmond (violinello), and Mr. Benno Moiseiwitsch (pianoforte).

Herr Fritz Kreisler visited Nottingham on November 17, and among his chief items were Mendelssohn's Concerto and a Recitative and Scherzo for the violin alone, from his own pen. The vocalist was Miss Roma Tremaine.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Sheffield Promenade concerts have started the third season with more hopeful prospects than at any time since their inception three years ago. A competent professional orchestra of about sixty-five players has been organized, and a more extended scheme of rehearsals has brought about increased cohesion and more highly-finished performances. Two concerts have already been given, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Rodgers. At the first, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, Elgar's 'Sursum Corda,' Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody,' and other works were given. Miss Tosta de Benici played with incisive brilliance in Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, and Miss Gertrude Blomfield sang songs by Mozart, Scott, and Ronald with great charm of style. At the second concert the symphony was Haydn's in G (Letter V), and the Concerto was Tchaikovsky's for violin and orchestra, the soloist being Anton Maaskoff, whose vivid rhythmic style is well suited with Tchaikovsky's strongly marked periods. Grieg's charming Lyrische suite, Smetana's overture to 'The bartered bride,' and shorter pieces by Elgar and Mendelssohn completed an interesting programme. Miss Lily Crawford sang a number of English songs with marked success.

The Sheffield Musical Union selected Elgar's 'King Olaf' for the first Subscription Concert, given in the Albert Hall on November 16. The concert furnished an opportunity for the reappearance as conductor of Dr. Henry Coward. That fact, together with the announcement of his marriage during the previous week, secured for the famous choir-trainer a cordial reception. The old Norse Saga evidently appealed to the dramatic sense of the Sheffield singers. They had previously sung the work and knew its every point and bar. Without being exaggerated the expression was made vivid, and the choir proved to be the most successful division of the performing force. The soloists were Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Robert Charlesworth. All sang enthusiastically. The orchestra also played very sympathetically in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony.

Concerts of the past few weeks have comprised performances by the Oak Street Choir (Spohr's 'Last Judgment'—conductor Mr. Joseph Armitage); the Endcliffe Wesleyan Church Choir (Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion'—conductor Mr. E. G. Laycock); and a pianoforte recital at the Grand Hotel by Mr. Edward Isaacs.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

The Leeds Philharmonic Concerts began on October 25, when the Hallé Orchestra came over and took part in an highly interesting programme under an excellent temporary chief, Mr. Michael Balling. Elgar's Violin concerto was introduced to Leeds by Mr. John Dunn, who was at his best, and gave a fine reading of the solo part, while Beethoven's eighth Symphony was another feature of the programme. For the rest, chamber music has had a rather unusual share of attention at Leeds. On November 1, the Rasch Quartet, augmented for the nonce into a string quintet by a second viola, gave Brahms's Quintet in F (Op. 88), and Svendsen's Quintet in C (Op. 5), together with the pleasing variations from Dvorák's in E flat. The performances reached a high order of excellence, and increasing audiences indicate that these concerts are appreciated. On November 8, the older established Leeds Bohemian Concerts were resumed, and Ravel's very original String quartet in F with its ultra-modernisms was coupled with Smetana's well-known and popular 'Aus meinem Leben' and the fragment in C minor of an unfinished quartet by Schubert. The mixture of old and new is, it will be seen, a pleasant feature of both these series of chamber concerts, and it also characterized a concert given on November 15 by the Edith Robinson Quartet, consisting of four ladies, who played Reger's Quartet in E flat, Brahms's in B flat, and Mozart's famous Quartet in C, with much force and a remarkably sympathetic ensemble.

On October 23, Miss Ella Child devoted a pianoforte recital to Liszt's music by way of celebrating the occurrence of his centenary on the previous day, and introduced some unhackneyed pieces, including the remarkable variations on the theme of Bach's 'Crucifixus,' one of the Petrarch Sonnets, and a 'Canzonetta' of Salvatore Rosa, all of which she played with exceptional brilliance of style. Another clever young West Riding pianist, Mr. Herbert Johnson, gave a recital on November 17, at which he played most artistically a more conventional selection of pieces, the names of Bach, Brahms, Chopin and Liszt being conspicuous among them. At the first Leeds Musical Evening, on October 24, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor appeared, and accompanied a number of his own compositions, songs, pianoforte and violin pieces, &c. At the second, on November 14, Sapellnikoff made a rather belated first appearance at Leeds, and played a typical recital programme, of which Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata was the most important feature. At their recital on November 17, Messrs. Maude and Mason played violin and pianoforte sonatas by Schumann (D minor) and Beethoven (G major). Miss Blanche Tomlin was the vocalist.

Leeds is to have much more than its usual allowance of opera this season, and already the customary visit of the Carl Rosa Company, which opened on October 30, and the first visit of the Quinlan Opera Company, on November 20, have to be chronicled. The former presented nothing new, for Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba' they introduced to Leeds a year ago. The Quinlan Company gave for the first time at Leeds Puccini's 'Girl of the Golden West' and Debussy's early and ingenuous little 'Scène lyrique,' as he styles it, 'L'enfant Prodigue.' The performance of Wagner's 'Tristan,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. John Coates in the principal parts, was of course the chief thing in the programme, and the revival of Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel' was exceedingly welcome.

BRADFORD.

At the Bradford Subscription Concert on November 3, Sir Henry J. Wood, with the Hallé Orchestra, gave a charming performance of Mozart's 'Hafner' Symphony, the effect of which was enhanced by the absence of the customary breaks between the movements. Mr. Kreisler appeared as violinist in Elgar's Violin concerto, of which an exceptionally fine reading was given. On November 6, the Bradford Permanent Orchestra began a fresh season, the feature of which will be that each concert is to be under a different conductor. Mr. Landon Ronald was to have been the first, but was disabled by influenza, so Mr. Julian Clifford took his place, and gave capital performances of Saint-Saëns's 'Rouet d'Omphale,' Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody, and the air and variations from Tchaikovsky's Suite in G. Mr. John Dunn was the violinist, and he gave a sympathetic and forcible performance of the solo part in Tchaikovsky's Concerto. The Bradford Old Choral Society gave Haydn's 'Creation' on October 24, under Mr. E. J. Pickles's conductorship. Miss Emily Breare's excellent vocalisation was employed to advantage in the soprano part, and Messrs. Cynlais Gibbs and Robert Burnett were efficient in the other principal parts. On October 23, Mr. S. Midgley, a well-known Bradford musician who has done much in this town to popularise the best music, began a series of recitals at which he, with Mr. A. E. Dunford as violinist, purposes playing all Beethoven's Violin sonatas—in themselves a musical education. By way of assisting in a comprehension of the music he has written a handbook on the sonatas which should have a wide utility, quite apart from the occasion which has called it forth.

OTHER TOWNS.

On November 2, Miss Fanny Davies appeared at the Wakefield Chamber Concerts, and played a generous selection of pieces, including the delightful 'Kinderschenen' of Schumann, which it is pleasant to hear now and again played by an accomplished artist. Mr. Campbell McInnes's highly artistic singing of some well-chosen songs (among them a series by Mr. Graham Peel, who accompanied them) added interest to a most enjoyable concert. The Halifax Orchestral Society has signalled its thirtieth season by migrating to a much larger hall, and gave its first concert of the season on November 16, when a programme of somewhat lighter character than usual may be taken as indicating a desire to appeal to a larger circle of supporters. Under Mr. H. van Dyk's direction some pleasant and artistic, if not very distinguished, music was given with much success. On November 3, the Hull Harmonic Society, of which Mr. W. Porter is the conductor, gave 'The wedding of Shon Maclean,' which seems, by its popularity this season, to have met 'a long-felt want' in the provinces. A bright performance was secured, in which Miss Eva Rich and Mr. W. H. Bullock were the soloists, a miscellaneous second part including Schubert's 'Unfinished Symphony.' On November 6, the York Symphony Orchestra gave Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, with Zacharewitsch as the soloist, and an effective, but unpretending, piece by Kotchetoff, 'A la Balaika,' was a novel feature in the programme, which also included Elgar's 'Wand of youth' Suite. Mr. T. Tertius Noble conducted.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BATH.—The Avon Vale Musical Society made an excellent departure from the conventional in choosing Bruch's 'The fiery cross' and C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' as the choral works in their programme of November 8. The singers gave well-rehearsed interpretations of both works, under the capable direction of Mr. J. S. Liddle, and further value was lent to the occasion by the artistic solo singing of Miss Alice Venning, Mr. Montague Borwell and Mr. J. L. Ward.

BELFAST.—At Dr. Lawrence Walker's first chamber concert on October 30, the Rawdon Briggs Quartet supplied the programme, with Miss McKisack as singer. An interesting novelty was the String quartet in A minor, Op. 13, by Ippolitoff-Ivanow.

BRIGHTON.—The eighty-fifth season of the Sacred Harmonic Society was opened on November 2 with a performance of 'Samson,' at the Dome, under the direction of the Society's esteemed conductor, Mr. Robert Taylor. As usual the virtues of his enlightened leading were reflected in the choral singing, which was in every respect far removed from the mechanical perfunctoriness so often associated with the performance of Handel's oratorios. Worthy assistance was provided by the solo singing of Miss Gladys Moger, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Charles Knowles, and by the organ-playing of Mr. Percy Taylor.

GREENOCK.—The first lecture to the Greenock Musical Association was delivered on October 23, by Mr. Percy A. Scholes, on the subject of 'Music from the listener's standpoint.' The lecturer covered a good deal of ground and provided much useful guidance to those bent upon the true appreciation of music. Mr. Kyrie Orr was in the chair and explained that the Association, of which he is president, is not a sort of choral union but a 'musical companionship,' a gathering of people who are interested in music, so as to be a focus and centre round which would eventually gather all the musical interests of the town.

GUERNSEY.—The second festival of Church choirs was held on October 26, in the Parish Church of St. Peter's Port, Mr. Crousaz at the organ, and Mr. J. Matthews, organist of St. Stephen's, the conductor, whose anthem, 'While the earth remaineth,' was impressively rendered. The choir of about 200 voices was drawn from six churches.

HANLEY.—The Potteries Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Carl Oliver, took part in a concert given at the Victoria Hall on October 19, singing Idle's 'Now is my Chloris fresh as May,' West's 'Love and Summer,' Benedict's 'Hunting song,' Cliffe Forrester's 'The call of the breeze,' and Lloyd's 'A baby's feet like sea-shells pink,' with admirable tone and expression. Mr. Alfred Hollins contributed largely to the interest of the occasion with his organ playing, Miss Gertie Perry sang, and Mr. W. T. Bonner joined Mr. Hollins in duets for pianoforte and organ.

KIMBERLEY.—The enterprising Diamond Fields Musical Society, conducted by Mr. A. H. Ashworth, performed Hubert Bath's 'The wedding of Shon Maclean,' on October 24, with great success. The programme of the occasion also included Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' Gade's 'Spring's message,' Leslie's 'Thine eyes so bright,' and the march chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' The vocalists were Miss Rebecca Reuben and Mr. J. T. Pursaill. The orchestra of thirty was led by Herr Carl Rybnikar.

NORWICH.—The success of a chamber concert given on October 13 encouraged the promoters to organise a scheme of chamber-music on a sound basis. It is proposed to give four concerts each season, to take place on Thursday afternoons. As the present season is partly over, two concerts only will be given—on January 19 and March 16.

PENRITH.—The musical enthusiasm prevailing in the Penrith district, much of it due to the energy of the Penrith Musical Society's conductor, Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, was well illustrated on October 26, when an audience representing all classes entirely filled the large Drill Hall. Herr W. Backhaus was the principal attraction, and his delightful playing roused great enthusiasm. The singing of the mixed choir of 200 was highly creditable to the conductor as a trainer. They gave a correct and spirited rendering of that exacting choral work, Bach's 'Magnificat,' and had also mastered the subtleties of Hamish MacCunn's ballad, 'Lord Ullin's daughter.' The soloists in 'Magnificat' were Miss A. Westmorland, Miss Parkin, Miss Edith Leitch, Mr. A. Sutton-Jones, and Mr. G. R. Gibbs. The ladies' 'Triphena' Choir, whose singing is well-known at the northern musical festivals, gave a highly-finished rendering of 'A love song' (Brahms) and Corder's 'Chorus of sirens,' testifying to the ability of their conductor, Miss M. E. Thomson. Orchestral items were given by an amateur band with a strong professional reinforcement.

SOUTHPORT.—On Friday, November 17, at the Queen's Hotel, the Vocal Union (male choir) gave the fourth Bohemian concert of the present series. Under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Clark, the choir gave part-songs by Brahms, Sullivan, Foote, &c. The eminent and veteran flautist, Mr. de Jong, gave some excellent solos, and Mr. A. L. Camden (of the Hallé Orchestra) contributed bassoon solos, which were given with perfect finish and technique. Quartettes by the Apollo Singers, and songs by Mrs. Verney Smith and Mr. F. Greene, completed an interesting programme.

STOURBRIDGE.—The season of the Stourbridge Concert Society was opened in October with an excellent programme, in which Parry's 'Pied piper of Hamelin' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' were the choral numbers. The performances given were in every way worthy of the music, and did justice to their widely divergent requirements. The tone was admirable. The orchestra was heard alone in Beethoven's fourth Symphony and Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and Mr. Frank Mullings sang the Sword-song from 'Siegfried.' The other soloist was Mr. Fairfax Crowder.

SUTTON COLDFIELD.—On November 14, Sir Frederick Bridge, as president of the Vesey Club, gave an address that consisted of a lecture upon the music to Milton's 'Comus.' Illustrations were given by a string quintet, led by Herr Suck, and by Miss Laura Taylor and Mr. James Coleman (vocalists).

WINDSOR.—The Gentlemen of the choir of H.M. Free Chapel of St. George and H.M. Private Chapel, Windsor Castle, gave a concert at the Royal Albert Institute on October 30, under Sir Walter Parratt's direction. The programme included Beale's madrigal 'What, shepherd, ho!'

Stevens's 'Sigh no more, ladies,' Webbe's 'Wanton gales,' Charles Wood's 'How sweet the tuneful bells,' Dr. Lloyd's 'Hither, hither' (conducted by the composer), and Bantock's arrangement of 'Down among the dead men.' Songs were given by Miss Perceval Allen and violin solos by Miss Marjorie Clemens.—The Windsor and Walkerville Choral Society (conductor, Mr. H. Whorlow Bull) selected 'Judas Maccabeus' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' and 'Songs of the sea' as the chief works in their season's programme.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—Dvorák's 'The spectre's bride' was performed by the Festival Choral Society at the Agricultural Hall on November 13, when Mr. George Halford made his first appearance as conductor of the Society in succession to Mr. Lyell-Taylor. He secured a vivid performance, into which the singers threw all their enthusiasm and highly-trained ability. Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. Frank Mullins and Mr. Thomas Howell were an efficient trio of soloists. Stanford's 'Revenge' was also in the programme, and was sung with stirring effect.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

At the first concert of the Königlische Kapelle (conductor, Richard Strauss), analytical programmes, price 30 pfennigs, were introduced in place of the programmes hitherto given away. This so annoyed the subscribers, that the free programmes were re-introduced at the second concert. A magnificent performance of Liszt's 'Dante' Symphony was given at this concert.—The first concert of the Singakademie was chiefly devoted to works by Liszt. The programme included the 'Missa Solennis' and the 13th Psalm.—A new String sextet by Max Reger was produced by the Hess Quartet (with H. von Dameck and B. Steinke) on October 26. It is said to be more pleasing than several of this composer's recent works.—A new undertaking, the Loevensohn chamber music concerts, has been inaugurated to produce little-known modern chamber music. It is not a commercial undertaking, as tickets for the concerts may be obtained free of charge. There are to be twenty-four concerts in the season.—On November 11, in the Beethoven Saal, Franz von Vecsey gave the first performance of Paul Juon's second Violin concerto.—Herr Emil Telmányi successfully introduced Elgar's Violin concerto to Berlin on October 21. Many well-known violinists were present, among them Marteau and Petschnikoff.—The programme of the first Hausegger Concert consisted entirely of works by Liszt, and included the 'Dante' Symphony and the 137th Psalm (for soprano solo, female choir, violin, harp, and organ). At the commencement of the concert, the Dresden organist, Kurt Gorn, played the fugue on the name B.A.C.H., and gave the audience an opportunity of appreciating the beauties of the Walker organ.—Busoni is giving a series of six Liszt recitals in the Beethoven Saal, at each of which programmes with historical and analytical notes by himself are provided. The first programme included a hitherto unknown 'Phantasie transcendente' on two themes from Mozart's 'Figaro.' The original manuscript in the Liszt Museum, which is almost complete, has been edited by Busoni.—Erich Korngold's pantomime 'Der Schneemann' is to be performed at the Kurfürsten Oper on Christmas Day.—The Vienna composer Arnold Schönberg has moved to Berlin, and is giving a series of lectures on aesthetics and composition in the hall of the Sternsche Conservatorium.—At the third Philharmonic Concert, conducted by Nikisch, two novelties were produced—Max Reger's Lustspiel-Overture (Op. 120) and Max Bruch's new Konzertstück for violin and orchestra (Op. 84), the latter played by Petschnikoff. Neither work met with success.—After many postponements, the first performance in Berlin of the 'Rosenkavalier' was given on November 14 at the Royal Opera House.

An invention of considerable interest was recently the subject of a demonstration in the Choralionsaal. It is the work of Herr Samuels, of Schwerin, and would perhaps be more correctly described as an adaptation of the 'bag' of the bagpipes, designed to enable a wind instrument player to carry on a long phrase without an apparent break for breathing. The instrument is called an 'Aerophor.'

BRUSSELS.

At the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, Gabriel Dupont's opera 'La Glu' has been repeated. The good impression created at the first performance was confirmed, and it should not be long before the work becomes widely known.—Fritz Kreisler gave a recital in the Salle de la Grande Harmonie, on November 23.

CAIRO.

At the Khedivial Opera a Saint-Saëns week is being arranged to celebrate the forthcoming visit of the composer.

CASSEL.

Heinrich Zöllner's new Symphony (Op. 100) was performed here under the composer's direction, for the first time, at the second subscription concert of the Theatre Orchestra, and was well received.

COLOGNE.

The first Gürzenich concert was dedicated to the memory of Ferdinand Hiller, and a memorial service was held at his grave.

DRESDEN.

A symphony for string orchestra by August Halm was produced with success at the first winter concert of the Mozartverein.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

The first performance of the opera, 'Oberst Chabert,' by H. W. von Waltershausen (Munich), is to take place before Christmas, under the direction of Kapellmeister Schilling-Ziemssen.

GENEVA.

In April of next year 'The Ring' is to be given in German for the first time in Geneva, under the conductorship of Prof. Stavenhagen.

THE HAGUE.

A nine days' festival of Richard Strauss's music took place last month. 'Feuersnot,' 'Salome,' 'Elektra,' and 'Rosenkavalier,' all the important orchestral works, and several songs, were performed.

HAMBURG.

The first symphony concert of the Verein Hamburger Musikfreunde, given under the direction of Kapellmeister Eibenschütz, was in memory of Gustav Mahler. The programme included the C minor Symphony, and the Kindertotenlieder (sung by Maria Freund).—Bittner's opera, 'Der Musikant,' was well received on its first performance here.

HANOVER.

Franz Neumann's new opera 'Liebele!' was well received on its first performance in the Königlches Theater.

HEIDELBERG.

The fiftieth annual festival of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein was held here from October 22 to 25, and took the form of a centenary celebration in memory of its founder, Franz Liszt. The works performed included the oratorio, 'Christus,' under the direction of Dr. Wolfrum; the 'Dante' and 'Faust' Symphonies, under the direction of Sigmund von Hausegger and Max Schillings respectively; the A major Pianoforte concerto, played by Busoni, with Richard Strauss conducting; and the choral work, 'Die Glocken des Strassburger Münsters.' There were also two chamber music concerts, at which the pianists, Rislér, Friedheim, Schelling, Herr and Frau Kwast-Hodapp, and Saint-Saëns appeared. The last-named, now in his seventy-seventh year, received a tremendous ovation. He played, among other pieces, Liszt's transcription of his own 'Danse Macabre.'

HELSINGFORS.

Franz Neumann's opera 'Liebele!' had a great success on its first performance here. Madame Aino Ackté sang the part of Christine.

KÖNIGSBERG.

The first concert of the Musikverein was in memory of Gustav Mahler, and included a performance of his second Symphony. Elgar's Variations will be played during the season.

LEIPSIĆ.

Works by Liszt have naturally been prominent in concert programmes. At the first chamber concert of the season the Gewandhaus Quartet played the hymn for strings, 'Angelus' (Prière aux anges gardiens), from the 'Années de Pèlerinage,' and the Vienna baritone, Franz Steiner, sang songs by Liszt. At the same concert Felix Draeseke's String quartet in C sharp minor was performed for the first time.—The programme of the first concert of the Musikalische Gesellschaft (conductor, Dr. Georg Göhler) included Liszt's 13th Psalm, the E flat Piano-forte concerto (played by Francis Quarry), and the 'Faust' Symphony.—At the third (orchestral) Gewandhaus concert Arthur Friedheim played the A major Piano-forte concerto, and the programme also included the 'Faust' Symphony. The performance of the latter under Nikisch was so overpowering as to leave no room for doubt as to the lasting value of the work.—Max Reger's Lustspiel-Ouverture (Op. 120) was performed for the first time in Leipzig at the fifth Gewandhaus concert. It was accorded a polite reception.—Max Wolff's new musical comedy 'Das heisse Eisen' has been produced with considerable success at the Neues Stadttheater. The music is modelled on the lines of the 'Meistersinger.'

MANNHEIM.

The programme of the first Academy Concert consisted entirely of works by Liszt. Siloti played the A major Piano-forte concerto, and the 'Totentanz.' The orchestra, under Bodanzky's conductorship, played the 'Faust' Symphony.

MOSCOW.

Korngold's pantomime 'Der Schneemann' is to be performed in Moscow this winter.

MUNICH.

Caruso has appeared twice (in 'Pagliacci' and 'Aida') at the Hofoper. Amazing scenes of enthusiasm were witnessed on each occasion, and the critics are of opinion that his voice is finer than ever.—After three years' interval Beer-Walbrunn's opera 'Don Quixote' has been successfully revived. The composer has used the interval to great advantage, by revising and cutting the score.—The Leipzig violinist Gustav Havemann has given a successful recital, at which he played Max Reger's new Chaconne for solo violin, a work which did not find favour.—A Festival in memory of Gustav Mahler was given on November 20 and 21. His 'Lied von der Erde' (a posthumous work of gigantic proportions) was performed for the first time.—The first German performance of Bittner's opera 'Der Bergsee' is to be given in the Hofoper on December 5.—A committee has been formed to organize a concert in memory of Felix Mottl. The proceeds are to form the nucleus of a fund for the foundation of a Mottl scholarship.—It is rumoured here that Bruno Walter will be appointed to succeed Mottl.

PARIS.

Raoul Gunsbourg's opera 'Ivan le Terrible' has been given here for the first time, at the Théâtre Lyrique de Paris. The title-rôle, which is a remarkable character-study, was superbly played by M. Chaliapine. The work is intensely dramatic, and occasionally brutal in its directness.—At the Grand Opéra, Massenet's 'Le Cid' has been revived, with extensive alterations in the libretto, after a rest of five years.

ROME.

It is stated in the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung that the first performance in Rome of the 'Rosenkavalier,' originally arranged for the gala night in honour of the King's birthday, has been postponed owing to the ill-feeling caused by German Press comments on Italian military methods in Tripoli.

SCHWERIN.

A Liszt Festival, consisting of a matinée and an evening concert, has been given. At the matinée, Dr. Leopold Schmidt, of Berlin, spoke on Liszt's life and work, and Kammerängerin Ucko sang songs by Liszt. At the evening concert, the E flat Piano-forte concerto (Hofpianistin E. Jeppel), the 13th Psalm, and the 'Faust' Symphony were performed under Prof. Kaehler's direction.

STRASSBURG AND STUTTGART.

Paul Juon's new Konzertstück for violin, violoncello, and piano-forte, with orchestral accompaniment, was produced in Strassburg, under the conductorship of Hans Pitzner, on November 15. A second performance has been given in Stuttgart under Generalmusikdirektor Max Schillings.

VIENNA.

A Liszt Festival was held in Vienna on November 12, 14 and 18. Three concerts were given, a piano-forte and vocal recital (Emil Sauer and Tilly Koenen), and performances of the 'Coronation Mass' in the Hofburgkapelle and of 'Christus' in the Musikvereinsaal.—Bittner's opera 'Die Bergsee' was produced at the Hofoper on November 8.—Hans Richter will probably conduct a performance of 'Die Meistersinger' at the Hofoper early next year.

WIESBADEN.

The second German Brahms Festival is to take place in Wiesbaden from June 1 to 4, 1912, under the direction of Generalmusikdirektor Fritz Steinbach. The Gürzenich Orchestra and Choir from Cologne will take part. Particulars may be had from the Deutsche Brahms Gesellschaft (Berlin), or from Konzertbureau Emil Gutmann (Berlin).—A work in novel form by Joan Manén, a 'Concerto Grosso' for two violins, piano-forte and orchestra, entitled 'Juventus,' met with considerable success on its first performance here, under Otto Lohse's direction. The soloists were the composer, Prof. Hugo Heermann (violin), and J. Joachim Nin (piano-forte).

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Henry Davy writes: 'The contest between harpsichord and piano-forte at the recent Bach Festival seems from the various reports to have been a victory for the harpsichord. This was very decided after the performance of Bach's early Capriccio descriptive of his brother's departure; but less so after the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. Unfortunately, Georg Schumann (of Berlin), who was to have been the pianist, was indisposed, and his place was taken by understudies, who were no worthy match for the harpsichordist, Madame Wanda Landowska. This was a "Small Festival," held at Eisenach, where the Small Festivals are to take place each year in which no Grand Festival is held; the early Italian school was well represented in the programme. Next year there will be a Grand Festival at Breslau.'

At a meeting of the members of the Coronation Choir, held in the Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, on October 25, Sir Frederick Bridge presented to Mr. Henry King a cheque on behalf of the subscribers, in recognition of his services as Hon. Secretary to the Coronation Choir Dinner (given at the Hotel Cecil, in honour of Sir Frederick Bridge); and also as a token of their appreciation of the manner in which he carried out the onerous duties of Secretary to the Coronation Choir generally. Mr. Henry King, in conveying his thanks, said it was a great honour to be associated with the Choir, and the appreciation of that honour was greatly increased by the large number of subscribers (182) to the valuable testimonial.

When Mr. W. S. Bambridge, who has been 'Master of the Music' at Marlborough School for nearly fifty years, signified his intention to retire, a subscription fund was organized in order to provide a fitting celebration of the event. Over £900 has been subscribed by some 800 donors, and it is hoped that the fund, which will be kept open till the end of the year, will reach £1,000. On October 28, when the Marlborough Club paid its annual visit to Marlborough, Sir James A. Boardillon, chairman of the testimonial committee, said that it was proposed to found a Bambridge music prize to be awarded annually, and to establish an annuity on the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Bambridge.

Mr. Montagu-Nathan has been invited to lecture on 'Musical taste' before the Yorkshire Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians at Sheffield, on December 9.

The thirtieth Musical Festival held at Norwich took place in St. Andrew's Hall on October 25 to 28. We were not honoured with an invitation, and therefore cannot give a full report. The programmes and list of artists were given in our September issue, p. 581; but M. Vsäye did not play the Elgar Violin concerto, as announced. An outstanding feature was the performance of Elgar's oratorio, 'The Kingdom,' which was conducted by the composer, and attracted a large audience. Sir Henry Wood was, as usual, the conductor-in-chief.

The Girls' School Music Union, the Music Teachers' Association, the Home Music Study Union, and the Union of Directors of Music in Boys' Schools, have arranged to hold a joint Holiday Conference on January 8 to 12, at St. Paul's School for Girls, Brook Green, Hammersmith. A united committee has been formed, of which Miss Cecilia Hill (Wentworth Hall, Mill Hill) is the secretary.

The following works have been chosen for performance by the Gloucester Choral Society (conductor, Dr. A. Herbert Brewer):—Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' Verdi's 'Requiem,' Brewer's 'Summer Sports,' Brahms's 'Liebeslieder,' Cornelius's 'Surrender of the soul.' Sir C. Hubert H. Parry has been elected president in the place of the late Mr. Joseph Bennett.

'Die Goldene Märchenwelt,' a fairy play, with music, that has achieved great success on the Continent, is to be produced under the name of 'The golden land of fairy-tales,' at the Aldwych Theatre, early in December, under the management of Mr. Albert Archdeacon, acting for Mr. Joseph Becham.

Mr. Caradoc Roberts, who was formerly a carpenter, and is now organist of the Welsh Congregational Church, Rhosllanerchrugog, has passed the final examination for the degree of Doctor of Music.

Mr. Walter Attersoll, organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Parish Church, South Lambeth, has been presented with a gold watch in recognition of his long services.

A paper on 'Humour in music, from the Cat's Fugue to The Rosenkavalier,' was read by Dr. Otto Neitzel at a meeting of the Concert-goers' Club on November 16.

Gilbert and Sullivan's 'H.M.S. Pinafore' will be performed by the Streatham Amateur Operatic Society at Streatham Hall on December 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Answers to Correspondents.

ABRACADABRA.—The following is a suitable scheme of music for a performance of 'Twelfth night':

To introduce 'If music be the food of love,' &c., play the opening phrase of the song 'Come away, death'; repeat at the words 'That strain again, it had a dying fall.'

Entr'acte ... Bourrée, from German's

Entr'acte ... 'Much ado' music (Novello).

Song ... Gigue from ditto (Novello).

Song ... 'O mistress mine' (Traditional).

Entr'acte ... Marjorie Gavotte (West) (Novello).

Song ... 'Come away, death' ... Arne.

Entr'acte ... Bourrée No. 1 (Handel) (Novello).

Entr'acte ... Bourrée No. 2 (Handel) (Novello).

Entr'acte ... Alla Gavotte ... B. Tours.

Song ... 'When that I was an' a little tiny boy'

(C. V. Stanford's setting, or that of Hatton).

Messrs. French & Co., Southampton Street, Strand, publish the traditional music of this (and all Shakespeare's plays), including Arne's 'Come away, death,' and the snatches of song for Sir Toby and Clown. The catch, 'Hold thy peace, thou knave,' is in Hawkins's 'History of Music.'

L. WILKES.—The muscles in your throat are evidently weak. You will have to be patient while they slowly develop strength through suitable exercise. At your age (twenty-two) a man's voice does not often settle. It may be that you ought not to sing tenor, or that you misuse the higher registers.

J. W. REYNOLDS.—As we have repeatedly stated in the Musical Times, the label inside a violin is no proof of the identity of the maker. There are thousands of cheap violins labelled 'Amati.' If you still think yours may be genuine, send the instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, Bond Street, and for a small fee they will give you a report.

Other answers are unavoidably held over, or have been given privately.

Remarkable Work OF MUSIC EDUCATION.

Written by Famous Experts.

THAT Wonderful Book, the MUSICAL EDUCATOR, seems this autumn to be entering upon a new lease of life. As our readers know, its aim is to supply in interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG,
"The Piano and how to Play it."

EDWIN H. LEMARE,
"The Art of Organ Playing."

MADAME MARCHESI,
"The Teaching of Singing."

JOHN DUNN,
"On Playing the Violin."

SIR F. H. COWEN,
"The Art of Conducting."

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeggio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms. Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

Its Value to the Teacher.

In "The Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that "The Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"The Musical Educator" is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent." Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—

"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader. . . . It contains excellent instructions."

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d.; paper, 3d.

*Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 6s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 301, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

No. 41.

THE BARROW GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

Our columns have often recorded the splendid performances of choral music given by Mrs. Bourne's Barrow Choir. Mrs. Bourne, who for many years has taught solo-singing in Barrow, rapidly developed unusual capacity for choir training, in the severe but salutary school of competition. It is not merely that the wonderful technique she secures is so impressive—that of itself would not go very far with adjudicators of the performances of modern unaccompanied music: but that she is able to explore and reveal the height and depth and most delicate and subtle features of a composer's conception. It will be seen from the list given below that she has had to tackle many extremely difficult exemplifications of modern developments in choral composition.

MRS. BOURNE.

Since the formation of the Choir in 1900, it has won over seventy prizes, mainly in mixed-choir and female-voice choir classes at the Morecambe, Blackpool, Preston, Lytham, and Barrow Festivals, and at the Welsh Eisteddfod, London, 1909, when the ladies were placed second in the open class for sixty female voices. The men have been successful at local festivals, but their work, apart from the mixed-choir, has been confined principally to preparation of music for male voices for concerts at home and elsewhere.

The chief prizes won have been:

- (1.) The Morecambe Challenge Shield in 1906, and again in 1911.
- (2.) The Blackpool Shield two years in succession, viz., 1909 and 1910.
- (3.) First prizes for four years in the Open Choral Competition Class at Barrow previous to 1908, in which year a challenge shield for this class was presented to the committee by Mrs. James Walch, of Llandudno, and was won by the Barrow Madrigal that year and again in 1910—twice out of three entries.
- (4.) The Lytham Challenge Bowl in 1911.

In 1911 (up to October) the Choir held the Blackpool, Morecambe and Barrow Challenge Shields, and Lytham Rose Bowl, all trophies of premier honours.

The ladies' choir has won first prizes at Morecambe and Blackpool several times, and at Barrow secured premier honours for ten out of eleven entries in the open classes for female-voice choirs.

This year it has scored highest in its class at Morecambe, Blackpool, and Barrow Festivals. Out of sixty-four prizes gained by the whole choir, thirty-six were first, twenty-three were second, and five were third.

In answer to our question as to whether she and the choir had, during her twelve years' work, derived especial pleasure from the test-pieces, Mrs. Bourne says:

Certainly, we have had much trouble at times in preparing some of the music, but as a rule we have greatly enjoyed singing the most difficult part-songs at the competitions, and afterwards at our practices and concerts.

The following are the names of some of the favourite pieces:

MADRIGALS.

'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' 'Fair Oriana,' 'Hard by a crystal fountain,' and 'Fire, fire, my heart.'

PART-SONGS.

Elgar's 'There is sweet music,' 'Evening scene,' 'Go, song of mine,' 'Weary wind of the west,' 'The snow,' 'Fly, singing bird,' 'After many a dusty mile,' 'Feasting, I watch,' &c.; Bantock's 'On Himalay,' 'In the silent west,' 'The tiger,' 'Spirit of night,' &c.; Brahms's 'Weep on the rocks,' 'Love song,' 'Memories,' and 'O lovely May'; Delius's 'On Craig Dhu'; Debussy's 'Cold winter'; Max Bruch's 'Morning song'; Havergal Brian's 'Shall I compare thee'; Von Holst's 'Ave Maria'; Lasson's 'Spanish Gipsy girl'; Bach's 'Death, I do not fear thee.'

In preparing pieces for competition Mrs. Bourne works up to her own ideas of interpretation. She pays particular attention to adjudicators' remarks, and, as far as she can, follows their advice. She frequently gives her choir voice exercises, and follows Behnke's methods of voice-production. The majority of the members have received singing lessons privately from her.

KEIGHLEY.

(THE 'SUMMERSCALES' COMPETITION.)

October 21 and 28.

This event has grown into one of considerable importance, with a comprehensive syllabus and test-pieces of a high order. The choice of Bantock's 'On Himalay' and Elgar's 'Deep in my soul' set up an exacting standard in the chief choral class, and the competing choirs made excellent attempts to realise it. Barnoldswick Wesleyan (Mr. F. Lord) were first; Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. J. Barker), second; and Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker), third. In the chief male-voice class, the tests were Bridge's 'Bold Turpin' and 'With thee, sweet hope.' The winning choir, out of seven entries, was Nelson Arion (Mr. Lawson Berry), Holme Valley (Mr. Irving Silverwood) was second, and York (Mr. H. S. Wilkinson) was third.

Other choral tests, entries and results were as follow:

MIXED CHOIRS (fourteen entries).

Tests: 'Love and summer' (West).

'The village festival' (Pinsuti).

- 1st. Settle (Mr. F. Lord),
2nd. West End Congregational, Sowerby Bridge (Mr. B. Wadsworth).
3rd. York Glee and Madrigal (Mr. W. Thurgood).

LADIES' CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Sound sleep' (Vaughan Williams).

'Love's requiem' (F. Davidson).

- 1st. Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker).
2nd. Settle Choral Society (Mr. F. Lord).

SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Twelve by the clock' (C. H. Lloyd).

'The mermaids' (Pinsuti).

- 1st. Heaton Church Day School (Mr. J. H. Wilkinson).
2nd. Lower Wortley C.S., Boys (Mr. Tom Morton).
3rd. Skipton Brougham Street (Mr. A. Townsend).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (small, seven entries).

Tests: 'Descend, O shower' (Battye).

'All hail, thou queen of night' (Martin).

- 1st. Greetland Vocal Union (Mr. Edwin Holroyde).
2nd. Berry Brow Vocal Union (Dr. T. E. Pearson).
Birkenshaw Liberal Club (Mr. C. H. Fearnside).

Solo prizes were won by Miss Dorothy Jagger (girls under 15), Master George Jowett (boys under 15), Miss Pattie Clayton (contralto), Mr. Norman Dransfield (tenor), Miss Winnie Butterworth (senior violin), Master Reginald Whitehouse (junior violin). There were also duet and quartet classes.

The adjudicators were Mr. T. Tertius Noble and Miss Edith Robinson.

NOTTINGHAM.—October 28.

This was the tenth annual competitive Festival held in this city, and it is gratifying to record that the entries were excellent and the attendance of the public large. On this occasion the gathering was held in the Albert Hall, a handsome and commodious building admirably adapted for the purpose. There were twenty classes in the scheme, five of which were instrumental, and fifteen vocal. There were 172 individual entries in the solo classes and 53 in the various choral classes. In the male-voice choir section there were no fewer than seventeen entries, all of which duly appeared. The following were the chief results:

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Music all powerful' (Walmisley).

'After many a dusty mile' (Elgar).

- Pinxton (Mr. J. Calladine).
1st. Sheffield Glee and Madrigal (Mr. W. H. Robinson).
Kettering Gleemen (Mr. S. Roughton).
Stanton Hill (Mr. G. S. Moore).
Mansfield and Sutton Co-operative (Mr. F. Ward).
Moira Wesleyan Reform (Mr. A. W. Parker).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS—contd.

- Pye Hill and District (Mr. P. A. Hill).
Swadlincote and District (Mr. J. Frost).
Coventry Musical Club (Mr. J. Chapman, Jr.)
Pleasley (Mr. F. Woolley).
3rd. Mexborough Orpheus (Mr. G. A. Nixon).
Donisthorpe and District (Mr. J. L. Pratt).

| " (senior) ...                 | Mr. F. S. Cox.          |

Vocal quartet competitions were won by Retford Harmonic (male) and Nottingham Harmonic (mixed).

The Sheffield Glee Society and the Coventry Co-operative Choir gave very fine performances of the tests in the classes in which they were the first place. The adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Harry Evans, Mr. Allen Gill, Mr. Arthur Barlow, and Mr. Bernard Johnson. A strong feature of the evening's proceedings was the singing of the combined choirs under Mr. Charles G. Riley. A good deal of the success of the event was owing to the exertions of the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. G. Wynne Humphreys. A pleasant incident of the occasion was the presentation of a handsome writing-table to Mr. F. Purdy, the honorary secretary.

SOUTHEND.—November 11, 13, 18.

This is a new competition, which began most promisingly. It seems that there is ample musical talent in the district to support the Festival. The council and executive committee (of which Mr. H. W. L. Hobbs is the chairman) is a strong body. All concerned will be greatly encouraged by the success of their first effort. We are unable to give the details of what was a series of interesting competitions, and must be content to record only the chief results. The church choir competitions brought forward five very well-equipped and trained choirs. The solo-singing of the ladies more particularly was up to a very good average, and the children's choirs sang very tunelessly.

The following were the winners in the principal classes :

SMALL CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Tests : 'Break, break on thy cold grey stones' (Macfarren).

'There is music by the river' (Pinsuti).

1st. Westcliff Philharmonic (Mr. J. Barton).

LADIES' CHOIRS.

Tests : 'Rest thee on this mossy pillow' (Smart).

'Lift thine eyes' (Mendelssohn).

1st. Metropolitan Academy of Music (Miss Stanley Lucas).

CHURCH CHOIRS (Male).

Tests : 'O Lord, our Governor' (Gadsby).

'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake' (Farrant).

1st. St. Mark's Church.

CHURCH CHOIRS (Mixed voices).

Tests : 'Hearken unto Me' (Sullivan).

'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (Lee Williams).

1st. Cliff Town Church (Mr. J. R. Griffiths).

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS.

Baritone or Bass ... ..	Mr. Albert Benson.

There was also a scheme of pianoforte contests that included five solo-classes (in which Miss Daisy Batchelor was the senior prizewinner), two for duets, two for scale-playing, and two for sight-playing; two violin-playing contests were provided, and competitions in elocution.

The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, Mr. Henry Bird, Mr. Stewart Macpherson and Mr. Arthur Payne.

The arrangements, under the direction of Mr. C. Tarling, went very smoothly.

NORTHAMPTON.—November 14, 15, 16.

The twentieth annual Eisteddfod, under the auspices of the Northamptonshire Sunday School Union, occupied three nights in the Town Hall, and passed off most successfully. Mr. John James, of Hanley, adjudicated. There were six classes for instruments, and fifteen classes for solo-singers and choirs. The chief results were as follow :

VOCAL QUARTET.

EISTEDDFOD AT QUEEN'S HALL, LONDON.

November 22.

This was what was described as a 'Grand Choir Eisteddfod.' It was promoted by the authorities of the Welsh C.M. Church, Falmouth Road, for the benefit of their funds. There were sections for solo-singers and pianists. The entries were numerous, and were not confined to the nationality. The solo-singing had no outstanding merit, possibly because the character of the songs selected as tests was not sufficiently high to attract the best singers. The mixed-voice choir section brought forward six excellent choirs. The following was the result :

MIXED CHOIRS.

Test : 'Now joy shall be in cottage poor.' (F. H. Cowen.)

	Marks.
Folkestone (Mr. F. E. Fletcher) ... ..	71
Essendine, Paddington (Mr. W. Kendall) ... ..	69
Day-Winter Part-Song (Mr. G. Day-Winter) ... ..	67
New Jewin (Mr. W. Rees) ... ..	68
Willesden District (Mr. J. S. Waddell) ... ..	69
Clapham Junction (Mr. R. L. Davies) ... ..	62

The following are the adjudicators' criticisms of the first three choirs :

Folkestone.—Pleasing tone, and well-balanced parts. First movement very crisply and neatly sung. Second movement not quite in tune, slightly flat occasionally. A highly finished performance, most musically in the treatment of the music.

Essendine.—Good full-toned choir. First movement well sung, but wanting a little in buoyancy and life. Second movement was majestic, but was taken a trifle too slowly. The crescendo was very well worked up. Occasionally flat. Last portion very broad and stately.

Willesden.—Very fine choir; good tone. Tenor lead slack once or twice. Opening attack not quite bold enough, and one or two other attacks were timid. Second movement flat for some bars. Unison particularly good, and the crescendo was well worked up. Tenors too prominent in one place. Ending impressive. There was a lack of precision and neatness in this performance, though it had some fine, big effects.

The Chief Choral Competition was for male voices (60 to 80).

Tests: 'Walpurga' (Hegar).
'The little Church' (Becker).

(Only the first piece was sung.)

	Marks.
Bargoed (Mr. T. R. W. Lewis) ... ..	62
London Welsh (Mr. Ganmor Morgan) ...	73
Barry District (Mr. D. Farr) ... ..	60
Merthyr Vale and Aberfan (Mr. T. Thomas) ...	58
Pontypridd and District (Mr. W. H. Barry) ...	57
Pontardawe (Mr. D. Daniel) ... ..	68
Maritime, Pontypridd (Mr. F. Temple Evans) ...	71
Cardiff Harmonic (Mr. Roderick Williams) ...	70

The London Welsh Choir sang unaccompanied, and gave a superb performance of Hegar's very difficult piece. It was not strictly correct, but it had irresistible vim and certainty of attack. The tone was splendid, and the expression intensely dramatic. They ended about three-quarters of a tone sharp. But we forgive them that, because of the poetry and drama they so finely portrayed. Dr. McNaught, in adjudicating, said the conductor had displayed canniness in electing not to employ the pianoforte to expose the tendency of the choir to sharpen. He thought the conductor must be a Scotch-Welshman.

Maritime also gave a very fine performance. Their tone had ringing resonance, and the rhythmic treatment was excellent. They sang accompanied, and as they lost the intonation the fact was advertised to the whole of the audience. The expression in places caught a fascinating yearning mood. Some of the pp effects were supremely delicate and beautiful.

The Cardiff Harmonic sang without accompaniment. Their interpretation was a very impressive one. There were wrong notes and in one place they lost the key for a brief period. The virtue of the performance was its fine expression.

The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Mr. Dan Price. The accompanists for the songs were Mrs. D. K. Hughes and Mr. David Richards. The audience was a very large one. The joint honorary secretaries were Mr. John Davies and Mr. D. B. Jones.

The proceedings, apart from the preliminary hearing, occupied nearly five hours.

The Swindon Eisteddfod, organized by the Swindon and District Free Church Council, was held in the Mechanics' Institution, Swindon, on November 15 and 16. Faringdon Street Wesleyan Choir won the challenge shield in the chief choral class for choirs of under forty voices. The tests were 'O worship the Lord' (Alfred Hollins) and 'Fairy Bell' (Macfarren). Four choirs competed in this section. The same number competed in a small choir section. There were numerous entries in solo classes. Mr. Granville Humphreys was the adjudicator.

THE SOUTH AND WEST LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This organization, which, founded in South London, now includes all parts of West London, has issued its syllabus for 1912. The competitions extend from March 2 to 9, and will be held at the Wandsworth Town Hall, and the prize-winners' concerts on March 16 at the Crystal Palace. There are in all ten choral sections, two pieces being selected for each class, and it is noteworthy that in every case the choice has fallen upon British composers. But in the solo classes other nationalities and classic works are represented by selections from the works of Mendelssohn, Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Wagner, Schubert, Schumann, Mozart, Chopin, &c.

There are several open choral events, but the solo items are restricted to South-East, South-West, and West London. The adjudicators named are familiar and include: Dr. Abernethy, Mr. Henry Bird, Dr. Borland, Dr. Frost, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Mr. Herbert Hodge, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Dr. Walsley Little, Dr. McNaught, Herr Hans Neumann, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. Richard Temple.

The secretary, Mr. Lester Jones, of 49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, London, E., will forward a copy of the syllabus if desired.

MIDLAND COMPETITION FESTIVAL (BIRMINGHAM).

May 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18, 1912.

The syllabus of this new Festival is now ready, and can be obtained, price 4d., post-free, from the Hon. Secretaries, Queen's College, Birmingham.

If the elaborateness of the programme is any guide, the event promises to be one of the greatest of its kind held in the country. The scheme is founded largely on the Blackpool and Morecambe models. The committee are thus able to avail themselves of the great experience gained up North in working the schemes for festivals of this type. No fewer than 95 classes are announced and 141 test-pieces are enumerated. The classes include vocal and instrumental solos in numerous grades or sections, children's choirs, and adult choirs of all descriptions. The chief choral classes are divided into three special sections: (a) Midland counties only (b) Open, and (c) Special.

The term 'Midland' means the counties of Leicester, Salop, Stafford, Worcester, and Warwick.

The special classes are open to choirs that have won a first or second prize in an open class during 1909, 1910, or 1911, at the undermentioned competitions:—Abergavenny, Alexandra Palace; Barrow-in-Furness; Blackpool; Berks, Bucks, and Oxon.; Bury; Bristol; Buxton and North Derby; Carlisle; Lytham; Morecambe; Morriston; Mountain Ash; New Brighton; Nottingham; People's Palace, Preston; Stratford and East London; Southport; South London; Welsh National; Westmorland; Worcestershire and York.

Beside money-prizes, challenge shields have been promised from Messrs. Novello & Co. (two), Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, Messrs. Boosey, Messrs. Curwen, Messrs. Chappell, Messrs. Schott, and Messrs. Augener.

It is hoped that the central position of Birmingham will attract choirs from all parts of England and Wales.

In our two previous issues we gave many particulars of the great musical competition to be held next Whit-week in Paris. Nothing further has transpired since we last wrote, but we believe that important announcements will be available for publication in our next issue.
